NUNGESSER-COLI MESSAGE IS REPORTED FOUND; TWO OCEAN TRIPS PLANNED DESPITE DISASTERS

Prohibition "Czar" Muzzled by Mellon's Order

DRY ENFORCEMENT LEADER ON GRILL FOR GRAFT BLAST

Hundreds of Letters and Telegrams Are Received Following Report on Conditions.

ALL ADDRESSES TO BE CENSORED

Lowman Is Sticking to His Guns But Refuses To Elaborate on Prohi Force Corruption.

Washington, September 10.—(United News.)—Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Seymour Lowman was placed under "censorship" by his superiors tonight.

The "dry czar" has made several statements which officials described as indiscreet, so henceforth his speeches and press statements will be scrutinized by higher treasury officials before they are made public.

"Talking Himself Out of Job."

Authorities indicated that Lowman was virtually "talking himself out of his job." While administration leaders were endeavoring to keep prohibition out of the limelight and to carry on enforcement work without great publicity, Lowman issued a blasting statement charging the entire federal dry army was honeycombed with graft and corruption and that it would take 50 years to make prohibition effective.

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has called Lowman on the grill. Under-Secretary Mills has also conferred with Lowman on the "free speech" subject.

Meantime Lowman is sticking to his guns, contending he has stated nothing but the truth, but refusing to elaborate on the subject.

Political reaction to the Lowman statement has been tremendous. Hundreds of letters and telegrams commenting on Lowman's observations have been received at the treasury in the past 24 hours.

Not Helpful.

Some administration leaders indicated that Lowman's assertions at this time were not viewed as helpful with a presidential year in the offing.

It was also held by some that the assistant secretary's speech at Buffalo, N. Y., attacking the state legislature and Governor Al Smith's attitude toward the 18th amendment was untimely as it would stir up antagonism in the state.

His bribery and corruption declaration was frowned upon by his superiors and federal leaders. For political reasons it has been deemed advisable to keep prohibition in the background during the next 12 months. Now, prohibition is deemed certain to be brought up on the next congress with more vigor than ever, with demands for congressional investigation of Lowman's statement to place the blame on those responsible for such a "corrupt organization" after eight years.

Meantime, Lowman is expected to remain in the background while Dr. J. M. Doran, prohibition commissioner, takes full charge of all dry law enforcement work.

Doran in Charge.

When the prohibition bureau was created Doran was made "dry czar" and Lowman was to act merely as liaison officer between Mellon and

Mother Attacks Woman Teacher Who Whipped Son

Walker County Community Stirred Over Lashing Given Miss Bertha Harp by Mrs. Jas. Gross.

CASE IS TO GET COURT AIRING

When Boy Reports Chastisement, Parent Lays in Wait and Uses Heavy Switch on Teacher.

Chattanooga, Tenn., September 10. (AP)—News comes from the Wallaceville community, in Walker county, Georgia, that the residents of that section are considerably exercised over the whipping of Miss Bertha Harp, school teacher, by Mrs. James Gross, because the former disciplined a 15-year-old son of the latter.

According to the story in circulation in north Georgia, when Benjamin Gross, a pupil at the Wallaceville school, returned home and told Mrs. Gross that he had been whipped by the teacher the mother became very angry and the next morning lay in wait on the roadside for the teacher to pass on her way to school.

Without warning, it is reported, the irate mother attacked Miss Harp with a heavy switch, giving her a severe beating. Following the attack, Charles Harp, father of the teacher, swore out a warrant for Mrs. Gross charging her with assault and battery. Mrs. Gross waived preliminary hearing and was bound over to the grand jury by City Judge J. A. Coats, of Chickamauga, Ga., the bond being placed at $500.

BLONDES LOSE SLIGHT EDGE ON BRUNETTES

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Chicago, September 10.—Blondes may have a slight edge on brunettes early in the game, according to Miss Ethel Diedrich, beauty expert, but after they reach 35, assuming any woman ever admits that age, the brunette comes into her own.

After 35, the blonde takes on weight rapidly and the phrase "fair, fat and forty," means the fat lady is of fair complexion.

Stage stars are offered as proof of this assertion Lillian Russell, noted beauty; Kathlyn Williams, screen ingenue, and Sophie Tucker, were blondes, and their weight was a constand worry and burden.

On the other hand Jane Cowl, a lovely brunette, has maintained an even weight for more than 20 years. Julia Marlowe, Shakesperian actress, is still slender and graceful at 50. Maxine Elliott never grew plump and Sarah Bernhardt remained very slender. All are or were pronounced brunettes.

Physicians and anthropologists deny that coloring has anything to do with avorisdupois, but notwithstanding, the above examples and many others stand out as proving that the blonde runs to weight after she reaches 35 years.

J. S. CALHOUN DIES AT CARTERSVILLE

President of Bank and Leading North Georgia Citizen Succumbs to Long Illness.

Cartersville, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Joseph Selden Calhoun, 55, one of the leading citizens of northwest Georgia and for a generation an authority on financial matters, died at his home in Cartersville Saturday evening at 9 o'clock after an illness of three weeks. Angina pectoris was given as the immediate cause of his death.

Funeral services are announced for Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the First Presbyterian church and interment will take place at Oak Hill cemetery.

For the past 15 years Mr. Calhoun has been president of the First National bank of Cartersville, an institution with resources above $1,000,000. He rose from the ranks in this organization and throughout his business career enjoyed the unquestioned confidence of the entire community. In state and national banking circles he had always taken an active interest and at the time of his death was vice president of the state bankers' association and recently completed a two-year term as a member of the executive committee of the American Bankers' association. In the latter capacity he was one of two bankers selected from the southeastern section of the country.

For the past ten years Mr. Calhoun has been president of the Cartersville Building and Loan association. He was one of the moving factors in the organization of the Cartersville mills, considered one of the best of its kind in the state and since it began operation has been its president.

A member of the First Presbyterian church, he was one of its most active members and was a leader in its choir as well as in musical circles throughout this section. He was a Scottish Rite Mason and one of the oldest members of Yaarab temple of Atlanta. As a charter member of the Cartersville Rotary club he had taken a leading part in this organization.

Mr. Calhoun, who never married, was a son of the late John Joseph Calhoun and Mary Saye Calhoun. He is survived by two brothers and two sisters, W. Sayre Calhoun, of Decatur; and John J. Calhoun, of Dallas, Texas; Mrs. H. N. Van Devender, of Irvington, Ala., and Mrs. Lila C. Morgan, of Castersville.

His parents came to Bartow county from South Carolina and his family was closely related to that of the illustrious statesman, John C. Calhoun, of the Palmetto state.

Mr. Calhoun attended the public schools here and in Cedartown and completed his education at Mount Herman academy, Northfield, Mass.

Upon his return home he accepted a position in the First National bank here and had the privilege of seeing it grow into one of the leading banking institutions of the south.

MEXICAN CHARGED WITH COMPLICITY IN RAILROAD RAID

Nogales, Ariz., September 10.—(AP) A message to the Herald today from its Mazatlan correspondent says the mayor of Huadjicor, Nayarit, Mexico, and several other municipal officials have been arrested in connection with the death of Miss Florence M. Anderson, Los Angeles school teacher. She died of bullet wounds received when bandits attacked the train on which she was riding from Mexico to Nogales Sonora, Mexico, about three weeks ago.

The Mazatlan message declares that the officials have been formally charged with direct participation in the fatal train attack. Their arrests resulted from the investigation of Gen. Escalona, Mexican army commander in the area, into charges that the mayor and other officials were connected with bandit activities of "El Pillaco," credited with the train attack.

FEAR OF GAINING WEIGHT CAUSES SUICIDE ATTEMPT

New York, September 10.—(AP)—Fear of fat is given as the reason for an attempt by Miss Alice Agnew, 21, a chorus girl, to end her life. Her brother, Hanson Agnew, of Media, Pa., said she had brooded on the thought that she might become too heavy for dancing.

IMPARTIAL COURT SUGGESTED TO SIT ON CANAL DISPUTE

Differences Between Panama and United States Brought Up at World League Meeting.

Geneva, Switzerland, September 10. (AP)—The status of the Panama Canal Zone, a question deemed to be vital for the United States, because it is connected with the problem of American national security—was raised suddenly at the session of the assembly of the League of Nations tonight. Dr. Eusebio Morales, former foreign minister, of Panama, brought the subject up and suggested that unless the United States accepted Panama's claim to sovereignty over the Canal Zone, this controversy and any other dispute should be submitted for settlement to an impartial court of justice.

It was inferred that Dr. Morales advocated referring the Panama controversy to the world court of justice at The Hague, because, in vigorously opposing the creation of a special League of Nations for the American continent, he advanced as one of his reasons that such a step would involve the establishment of a special American court, which, he said, would offer no greater guarantees of impartiality than The Hague court of justice created under auspices of the League of Nations.

Dr. Morales declared that Panama in order to permit the construction of the remarkable passage linking the Atlantic and Pacific oceans had granted to the United States in perpetuity, the use, occupation and control of a zone 10 miles wide across her territory for the construction, administration, maintenance, sanitation and protection of the canal and the exercise of all rights, power and authority over the zone by the United States "as if the United States possessed sovereignty over the territory."

But, he explained, a serious question has arisen, in regard to which no compromise was possible, because it could not be settled unless one of the

TEACHER ORDERED TO LEAVE HOME

Louisiana Principal Will Return to School Monday Under Guard of Two Officers.

Covington, La., September 10.—(AP) Professor George W. Wingo, principal of the Central High school near Tallisheek, who with his wife and eight-month-old baby was ordered from the community Friday night by 15 unmasked men, will return to his school Monday and open classes, he declared tonight.

Sheriff Galatas, of St. Tammany parish, has ordered two deputies to escort the principal back to his home, guard him and make a thorough investigation of the case.

The sheriff said Wingo told him that at 11 o'clock Friday night, "I was awakened by someone pounding on my front door. When I stepped to the door I saw a man on the gallery. A little beyond, in the road, I could see a group of men—about 12 or 14. Most of them were armed, but too far away for me to recognize any of them."

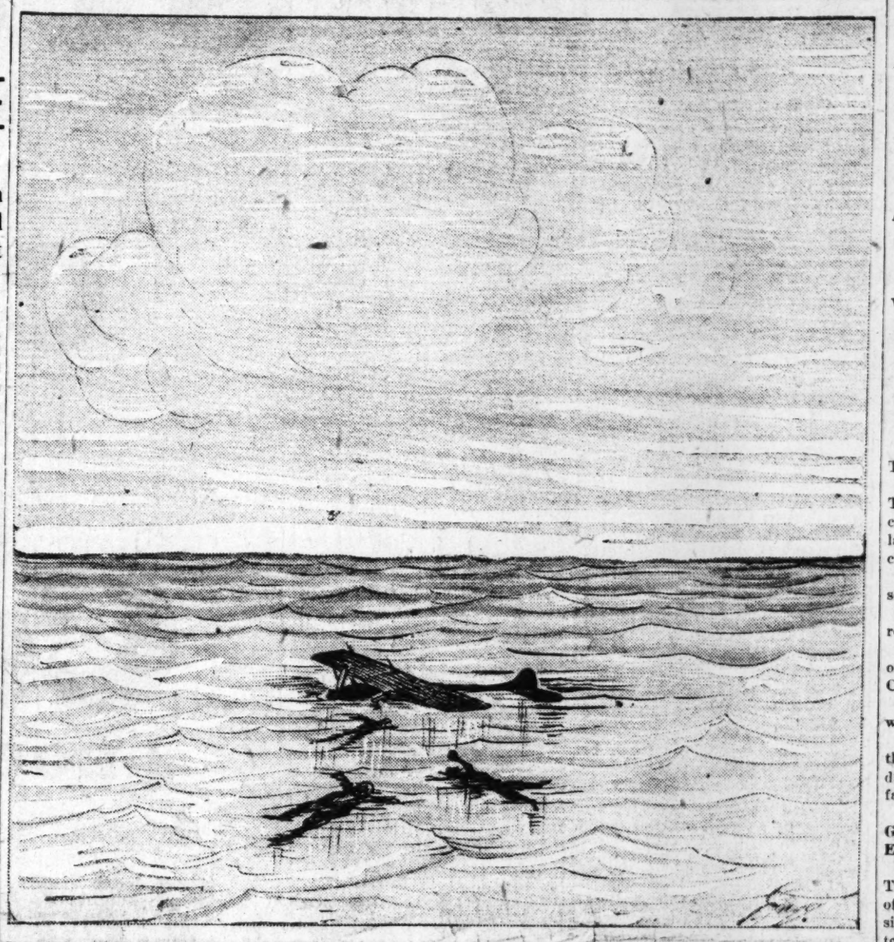

Professor Wingo said the man on the gallery said, "You have 40 minutes to leave here." "He asked me if I had an automobile. I told him I did. With that he started down the steps," the professor continued.

"I went back into the house and told my wife what had happened, and told her it was best to leave. We hurriedly got some clothing together and with our baby drove quickly away in our car."

The professor said he and his family went to Abita Springs, where they have been since. From there he got in touch with Sheriff Galatas, and the sheriff assigned two deputies to accompany him back to his school.

The professor said he knew of no reason for the action of the men in ordering him to leave the community. School officials also claimed to know of no reason why the principal was ordered to leave.

AVIATORS FACING FLIGHTS OF PERILS

Following Trip to Tokio, Two World Fliers Will Jump to Little Midway Islands.

PRIDE OF DETROIT ARRIVES IN JAPAN

Kagoshima, Japan, September 10.—(AP)—The globe circling airplane, Pride of Detroit, passed over this city at 1:35 p. m., en route to Tokio from Shanghai.

Shanghai, September 11.—(AP)—The monoplane Pride of Detroit, with Pilots W. S. Brock and Edward F. Schlee, hopped off at 5:42 a. m. today for Tokio.

The weather was favorable for the 1,200-mile flight to Tokio, most of it over water.

A large crowd of Americans and Britishers cheered the Pride of Detroit on her departure, despite the early hour. The aviators waved cheerful farewell. They previously had declared that they had every expectation of carrying out their itinerary—Tokio, Midway Islands, Honolulu, San Francisco and Detroit.

The globe fliers, who arrived at 7:30 p. m. yesterday morning, were eager to resume their journey at daybreak today, notwithstanding that the 780 miles of bucking headwinds from Hongkong had kept them 11 hours in the air. They were aided in getting away by Britih air force men.

In reaching Shanghai, Brock and Schlee traveled 11,075 miles from Detroit in 15 days, in their effort to surpass the globe-circling record of 28 1-2 days.

"USE OWN JUDGMENT," SCHLEE'S WIFE ADVISES.

Detroit, September 10.—(AP)—Mrs. Leah L. Schlee, wife of Edward F. Schlee, round-the-world flier, told the Associated Press today that she had cabled her husband at Tokio advising him to "use his own judgment" in making the projected flight from Tokio to one of the small islands of the Midway group.

"I do hope he will be sensible, though, and decide to take a boat to Vancouver," Mrs. Schlee said.

"There is a boat scheduled to leave Tokio on the 15th and if he secured another relief pilot after arriving in North America there would be still a chance for him to break the record."

Mrs. Schlee declared that she would not attempt to dissuade her husband from making the dangerous ocean flight.

"I know he has his mind set on breaking the record," she said, "and I don't want to be a hindrance. But I don't see how he and Mr. Brock

Richard Child, Author, Weds His Secretary

Former Ambassador to Italy Recently Divorced in Paris.

Stroudsburg, Pa., September 10.—(AP)—Richard Washburn Child, author and diplomat, and Miss Eva Sanderson were married here late today by Squire P. M. Niles, the latter said tonight, after newspapermen had spent many hours in an attempt to verify reports that the marriage had taken place.

Squire Niles said he performed the ceremony at his office a short time after the couple had obtained a marriage license at the county courthouse here. Except to say that the marriage took place at 5 o'clock, he declined to give any details of the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Child, so far as could be learned here tonight, left Stroudsburg almost immediately after the ceremony, but no one apparently knew their destination. Telephone calls to Mr. Child's summer home at Buck Hill Falls, Pa., brought no response.

Mr. Child was former ambassador to Italy, being an appointee of the late President Harding, and is widely known as an author. His former wife, Maude Parker Child, also a writer of note, obtained a divorce from him in Paris several months ago.

Mrs. Child, it was said, was Mr. Child's secretary.

2 CONVICTS SHOT NEAR BRASELTON

Monte Wilson and Lee Johnson Wounded When They Attempt To Overpower Guard.

Braselton, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Monte Wilson and Lee Johnson, white convicts in the Jackson county chaingang here were shot and painfully wounded early today by Roy Tanner, guard, as they attempted to overpower and disarm another guard, George Phillips.

A large truck carrying convicts from the camp had just arrived at the road work and were unloading when suddenly Wilson and Johnson, it is said, leaped from the truck onto Phillips, the guard who was standing near, grabbed him and were trying to get possession of his gun when Tanner came up and was forced to shoot Johnson in the legs while Wilson was wounded through the abdomen, a heavy chain around the waist perhaps keeping the shot from taking full effect. The men were given prompt medical attention and it is thought that unless complications set up the shots will not prove fatal.

This is said to be the second attempt of Wilson and Johnson to overpower guards and make a getaway in the last few weeks.

NOTE IN BOTTLE TELLS OF LANDING OF FRENCH ACES

Message Says Fliers Came Down Near Sable Island—Mrs. Nungesser Identifies Writing.

FONCK AND LEVINE TO GIVE UP TRIPS

Windsor-to-Windsor Flight Abandoned; Ruth Elder and Robert MacIntosh To "Carry On."

New York, September 10.—(AP)—The Canadian Press today carries:

"Halifax, N. S., September 10.—The following message has been received by E. Gaboury, French consular agent for Nova Scotia, from the consul general of France at Montreal:

"'The department in France has sent me this telegram:

"Papers found in a bottle off Gironde, France, noting as follows:

"'May, 1927. We landed 20 miles off Sable Island. Nungesser and Coli.'"

"Nungesser's mother recognizes the writing of her son.

"Pray government to look around the island, which is really the one indicated at 180 kilometers east of Halifax."

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS EXPRESS SKEPTICISM.

Ottawa, Ont., September 10.—(AP)—The Canadian Press says government officials here are skeptical of the possibility that a bottle message, thought to have been dropped into the sea by the missing French airmen, Nungesser and Coli, off Sable Island in May, could have reached the French coast in four months as was reported in a message received by the French consul general at Montreal today.

When Nungesser and Coli were first reported missing, Sable Island, near Halifax, reported no sign of the airmen or of any airplane wreckage on the shore. The island is inhabited by only a handful of people.

Canadian cable and wireless stations and outlying posts in the maritime provinces were on the lookout for Nungesser and Coli after the fliers left Le Bourget, France.

RENE FONCK DECIDES AGAINST MAKING TRIP.

New York, September 10.—(AP)—Expectation that Charles A. Levine would abandon his proposed trans-Atlantic flight grew stronger today and further attempts were made to discourage the projected trans-Pacific hop of Edward F. Schlee and William Brock, around-the-world fliers, as results of the international wave of protests that has followed upon the loss of the planes Old Glory and the Sir John Carling.

In addition the navy department was urged to take steps toward pre-

Movie Companies Face Battle Over Location

:: ARMED GUARDS PREVENT BLOODSHED IN UTAH ::

Cedar City, Utah, September 10.—(AP)—Under the protection of six-shooters and sawed-off shotguns, between 40 and 50 members of a motion picture company today filmed scenes in a picturesque mountain location here, while from 35 to 50 members of a rival company stood idly by in the bright sunshine and rare atmosphere 11,000 feet above sea level.

Threats of armed warfare grew out of the efforts of the two rival companies, headed respectively by Albert Rogell and Edwin Carewe, for possession of the setting, which has never before been caught by a cinema machine. Deputized armed men formed the guard for the Rogell people during the filming of their picture, while Carewe's party watched.

The Rogell company has been here for two weeks, working at Inspiration Point, in the Cedar Breaks, a national monument. Yesterday Carewe and his company, headed by Dolores Del Rio, arrived. Carewe claimed prior right to the "location." Rogell contended his occupancy for two weeks sufficient claim to priority, and sought the protection of Sheriff J. T. Leigh, of Iron county, when Carewe threatened to use force to gain possession of the spot, which he claims is necessary to the proper development of his scenario.

Sheriff Leigh deputized a number of men in addition to several who went up the mountain to the "location," 18 miles from here, this morning. They accompanied Rogell and his company. Carewe and his party followed, the director threatening to "use force," sheriff or no sheriff, if Rogell does not vacate within 12 hours.

Rogell said he would appeal to

CUBAN STUDIES AMERICAN PRISONS

Jacksonville, Fla., September 10.—(AP)—Secretary of the Interior Rogerro Zayas Bazan, of Cuba, who arrived here this morning with his wife and son, en route to Washington and New York, will avail himself of the opportunity to study American prison systems while in this country, he announced this morning.

Senor Bazan and family, who arrived today from Havana, were extended an official welcome on behalf of the city by a committee of officials and Julio P. Embil, Cuban consul here.

The Cuban secretary announced in reply to questions relating to his visit that while in this country he wanted to visit a number of American prisons in order to improve the system in the island republic.

"We in Cuba are building a new central prison and we want to incorporate in it all the latest ideas," he said.

"I have been accused by my political enemies and by some unfriendly papers of trying to make a palace out of our proposed prison," Senor Bazan continued. "They fear it will encourage persons to break the law, but, regardless of that, we want to have a good prison for, after all, if a criminal is to be set right again he must have proper surroundings."

Prior to their departure tonight for Atlanta, where Senor Bazan will place his son in school, the official and family will be the guests of Consul Embil.

Guy King, Cuban consul here, just returned from an extended South American trip, had not been informed of the Cuban official's contemplated visit to Atlanta, nor had Mrs. Allen Deas, acting consul.

Governor George H. Dern, of Utah, for state troops if necessary.

Developments in the controversy in the mountain fastnesses which are nearly a mile higher than this town will not be known until the rival companies return to the hotel here, where both are quartered. Timely interference of hotel attaches prevented a fist fight between Rogell and Carewe in the hotel lobby this morning.

In claiming prior right to the location Carewe charges members of the rival company with "deliberately tampering with his trucks and automobiles so they could not climb the steep grades between here and Inspiration Point."

TWO MEN ARRESTED IN WAR OF MOVIES

Cedar City, Utah, September 10. (United News.)—Two men were arrested tonight by City Marshal Grant Walter in connection with arguments between rival Hollywood film companies for location sites.

Louis Jewome, business manager of the Edwin Carewe company, and Cal Paul, production manager of the Albert Rogell troupe, engaged in an altercation in the lobby of the El Escalante hotel and were arrested.

The two men later were released on bonds signed by Edwin Carewe, heading a company here filming "Ramona," and Rogell, heading a company here shooting "The Shepherd of the Hills."

the commissioner. But Lowman, it is understood, believed it his duty to directly supervise the prohibition work.

It became known that Lowman and General Lincoln C. Andrews, who retired six weeks ago as assistant secretary of treasury in charge of prohibition, customs and coast guard, are second cousins.

Lowman denied his statement was an attack on Andrews.

F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league, issued a statement approving Lowman's plan to try rid the dry service of crooks, adding that if "sincere believers" in the dry cause had been appointed originally the present housecleaning would be unnecessary.

W. H. Stayton, chairman of the association against the prohibition amendment, said Lowman, foreseeing failure in his work, is preparing an "alibi in advance."

NAMES OF GRAFTERS DEMANDED BY LEAGUE

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—The statement of Assistant Secretary Lowman of the treasury that there are "many incompetent and crooked men" in the prohibition service brought a demand today from the Association Against Impure Liquor that he "name the grafters."

Charles Capeheart, president of the association, referred in a statement to Mr. Lowman's assertion of yesterday that he was seeking to weed out incompetent and dishonest agents, and declared:

"We believe that every corrupt prohibition agent should not merely be dismissed. We believe that every corrupt prohibition agent should be brought to trial and the crooked operatoins from which the physician and the druggist are alone suffering should be exposed."

Capeheart said his organization possessed "ample evidence" to support Mr. Lowman's charges and that it was being submitted to the assistant secretary.

Light Showers Fail to Dispel Long Drought

A fortnight of hot dry weather, temporarily broken Saturday by scattered showers, will be extended over the forthcoming week-end, thinks C. F. von Herrmann, chief of the weather bureau here.

While a light precipitation was recorded Saturday over widely-separated areas of the state, the drought was neither dispelled nor additional rainfall promised.

Temperatures in Atlanta Saturday hit a comfortable range between 70 and 86 degrees, and these extremes will be approximated today, Mr. von Herrmann says.

Bright and sunny harvest weather prevails over the cotton belt generally, weather reports reveal.

parties completely adopted the views of the other.

FEARS OF SMALLER NATIONS QUITED.

Geneva, September 10.—(AP)—Fears of the smaller world powers that the League of Nations is faltering in its mission of consolidating peace among nations and neglecting to handle conflicts involving the great powers were somewhat quieted today at the end of of the debate in the first week of the assembly.

A moving expression of faith in the league by M. Briand and a declaration by Sir Austen Chamberlain that the British government bases its whole policy upon the league, which is growing from an acorn into a mighty oak, affording security and shelter for all nations, helped considerably to reassure the smaller nations who saw the decline of the league.

See Steady Progress.

Both British and French foreign ministers told of the league's works as a contrast to the recital of its faults by critics. They declared that not only have they not lost hope, but more than ever saw promise of sure and steady progress toward a solid peace. They warned against haste that makes waste and pleaded for a revival of faith in the league's capacity to build a road to universal peace.

M. Briand, eloquent in his optimism, injected emotion into his strong support of the league. Sir Austen Chamberlain, plain-spoken and severe, dwelt on the facts of what Great Britain already had done for arbitration, security and disarmament, but frankly warned that he would not make promises that he could not keep.

To extend the area of guaranteed boundaries now, he said, is "impossible" for his country, but added: "What is impossible today may be possible tomorrow."

Disarmament prospects received a big push forward from both speakers. M. Briand admitted that he foresaw the tri-partite naval conference doomed in advance to what he called "nonsuccess." He declared that a successful conference could be held only under auspices of the League of Nations. He believed that this conference would come one day and refused to share the pessimism of critics who told that the league's preliminary disarmament work has not been fruitful.

Naval Parley Failure.

Sir Austen Chamberlain found the cause of the failure of the naval conference in the lack of suitable preparation, and committed his country to sincere collaboration in future disarmament efforts. He declined, however, to accept burdens for the British empire such as were imposed by the Geneva protocol, declaring that acceptance of the protocol obligations, especially guaranteeing the frontiers of nations throughout the world, would disrupt the British empire.

The league would never die, said M. Briand for the peoples believe in it and their faith is making itself felt. Sir Austen Chamberlain, backing M. Briand's words, declared that in his judgment "no country, however powerful, can disregard the league's moral judgment or can be blind to the advantage of coming before the assembly and council to plead its cause, to receive approval and to justify itself before the world."

HINDU PROPOSES TO CAGE WOMEN BETWEEN 15 AND 25

Calcutta, September 10.—In a newspaper article protesting against Katherine Mayo's book, "Mother India," a Hindu leader suggested that the American woman is the most dangerous animal on earth and the only safe thing to do is to shut girls between 15 and 25 in cages, adding, "it would be a popular exhibition."

CHEMISTRY CHIEF HOLDS SCIENCE NEEDS CULTURE

Detroit, September 10.—(United News.)—Science needs more culture, in the opinion of Dr. Charles A. Browne, chief of the United States bureau of chemistry.

Speaking before the American Chemical society Friday, Dr. Browne pictured Ralph Waldo Emerson as an embryo scientist and deplored the abandonment of the classics in the curriculum of the technical schools.

"If Emerson had not followed literature, he might have become a scientist," Browne said. "He drew from chemistry his most striking analogies and his allusions to it are more frequent than from the other sciences."

There long has been a feeling that the humane spirit and broad outlook of the early scientists should not have been so entirely lost, declared the chemist.

EVANGELINE BOOTH SAILS TO LEGION MEET IN PARIS

New York, September 10.—(AP)—The commander of the Doughboys' Doughgirls was headed for France today as an honored guest of the American Legion.

Miss Evangeline Booth, commander of the Salvation Army in this country, sailed on the White Star liner Homeric to attend the Paris convention of the legion, where the Sallies will establish again war-time canteens where coffee and famous army doughnuts will be served.

Several hundred men and women members of the Salvation Army escorted the comander to the pier last night, after a farewell party at the army headquarters in Fourteenth street.

ROYSTON SCHOOLS OPEN WITH EXERCISES

Royston, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The 1927 fall term of the Royston public schools has opened. There is a large enrollment and all indications are that this will be a most successful term. Many of the citizens of Royston and surrounding territory were present at the opening exercises.

A special feature was the address of Rev. C. W. Henderson of Forsyth, former pastor of the Royston Baptist church. Talks were also given by C. C. Fain, member, board of education, who had charge of the program. Dr. E. N. Bowers, chairman, board of education; Rev. J. O. Brand, pastor, Royston Methodist church, and Dr. Pope A. Duncan, pastor Royston Baptist church, and Mrs. Phil W. Davis, new principal of the high school.

Professor W. G. Coffee is the new superintendent, coming to Royston from Ila. Professor R. W. Achurch, of Charleston, is coach and instructor in high school. Miss Louise Tucker completes the force of high school teachers.

In the grammar school Mrs. W. G. Coffee is principal and has the seventh grade. Other teachers are Miss Louise Goodson, Miss Radie McEwen, Mrs. Starks Ginn, Mrs. Joe Cunningham, Mrs. Jep Winn and Mrs. E. C. Phillips. Mrs. Sara C. Bowen is in charge of the music department.

THOMASTON SCHOOL OPENING DATE IS SET

Thomaston, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The city school will open Monday and Superintendent Smith expects the largest enrollment in the history of the school. Arrangements have been made with the county board of education for every high school pupil who lives in the county to enter without paying tuition and this will bring in scores of country boys and girls for the high school department.

It is expected that more than 1,300 pupils will enroll the first week. The city council has placed cement coping around the entire school grounds, which adds considerably to the looks of the playgrounds.

ARKANSAS FARMER AWAITS HEARING IN WIFE'S DEATH

Benton, Ark., September 10.—(AP)—Mrs. W. A. Bryant, wife of a farmer, is dead and Bryant, himself suffering from what officers say are self-inflicted wounds, is being held to await a hearing in connection with the fatal wounding of his wife—explained, it is believed, by a note found in the Bryant home declaring the slaying of Mrs. Bryant yesterday was "because she loved another man."

Bryant resisted arrest when sheriff's deputies reached his farm home but was overpowered.

The note asserted that Bryant planned to "kill the other man and himself."

Sheriff's deputies found Bryant pacing the yard of his home. Mrs. Bryant's body was found in the house lying near a pair of scissors and a blood-stained razor blade with which she apparently sought to defend herself.

FRANK O. LOWDEN DOES NOT CHOOSE TO PUBLISH PLANS

Chicago, September 10.—(AP)—Frank O. Lowden, once governor of Illinois, still does not choose to commit himself regarding his possible candidacy for the republican presidential nomination next year.

Mr. Lowden was informed of a report that he planned a formal statement of his plans soon.

"That is pure foolishness," he said. "There will be time for announcements when there is something definite to announce."

STUDEBAKER Sets Coast-to-Coast Record

Commander

4-DOOR SEDAN DRIVEN BY AB JENKINS FROM ATLANTIC TO PACIFIC IN 77 hours and 40 minutes

Ab Jenkins, building contractor of Salt Lake City, driving his own Studebaker Commander Sedan, was checked out at Tottenville Ferry, New York City, at 8 p. m., August 30, 1927, by Colonel James Justice, Commanding Officer, Miller Field, Staten Island; A. H. Means, of the American Automobile Association; and P. S. O'Neill, of the Western Union Telegraph Company. He was checked in by Western Union at Carquinez Bridge on San Francisco Bay at 10:40 p. m., September 2, 1927. His total elapsed time was 77 hours and 40 minutes.

Note that the record was made by an enclosed car which lists at $1495 f. o. b. factory. All previous transcontinental records have been made by open cars.

In June, 1926, Ab Jenkins drove his Studebaker Big Six Sheriff from New York to San Francisco in 86 hours and 20 minutes, beating the best time of the crack limited trains and reducing the best previous automobile record by 16 hours and 25 minutes.

In August, 1926, L. B. Miller drove a Wills St. Claire open roadster from New York to San Francisco in 83 hours and 12 minutes.

In June, 1927, L. B. Miller drove a Chrysler "80" open touring car, which is priced a thousand dollars above The Commander, from San Francisco to New York in 79 hours and 55 minutes.

When Carquinez Bridge, the six million dollar structure over San Francisco Bay, was completed last summer, Jenkins in his Studebaker Commander Sedan led the procession of automobiles at the dedication. Now, in the same car, he has set a new transcontinental record from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

No wonder The Commander has been acclaimed "the greatest post-war achievement of automotive engineering" and is outselling the combined totals of all the other cars in the world which equal it in rated horsepower.

NEW LOW PRICES

All Studebaker models have more than $100 in extra equipment without extra cost, including front and rear bumpers and shock absorbers.

American Among Claimants

:: FIGHT WAGED FOR HISTORIC ENGLISH FORTUNE ::

To Fortune of "Mad Maria"

Portsmouth, England, September 10. (AP)—An American, William Henry Knight, Los Angeles merchant, has bobbed up among the hundreds of claimants for the $10,000,000 estate of Maria l'Epine, who died here insane in 1798. Knight is the first American to lay claim to the great wealth of "Mad Maria." The list of claimants includes persons from various walks of life, from scrubwomen to lords.

Although Knight is the first American to get his claim filed, the clerk of the chancery court at London asserts that dozens of other Americans consider themselves the logical heirs and are preparing to claim the millions.

Maria's father was a French weaver, who came to England as a Huguenot refugee. He amassed a fortune in his factory at Spitalfields.

Knight traces his relationship to Abigail Eccles, a daughter of Maria. He is a cousin of A. C. Mason, who, with his three sisters, all of London, is reputed to be furnishing a large part of the money to prosecute the claims of his cousins.

Among the English descendants is Lord Bangor. Litigation over the estate developed when the Mason family recently reported finding documents in Saint Martins in the Field, London, which recorded, they assert, that Maria was married there and that her daughter, Abigail, was her true and legal heir.

Because of Maria's insanity and lack of proof of her marriage the fortune reverted to the crown. George III gave it to Admiral Lord Howe for revolutionary activity, on condition that it be restored in the event a rightful claimant appeared. Maria's supposed husband, Edward, was Lord Howe's secretary. Maria left only $350,000 but interest on the original estate for 130 years has built it up to its present dimensions.

FORDS NOW RIDE LIKE LINCOLNS

Detroit.—Along with the announcement of the new Ford car comes word of a startling invention that actually makes Fords float over the roads on cushions of air. Ford owners will welcome the news that bumps and rough riding are a thing of the past. The invention provides air cushions between the spring leaves that can be installed, without any experience, in 5 minutes, for a trifle. The inventor, Mr. T. S. Hamilton, Dept. 111, 530 W. 27th St., Los Angeles, Calif., anticipates that eventually every type of car will be equipped with this invention and requires men now to take care of local business for him. He offers an opportunity of making from $50 to $175 a week. Write him for full particulars and free sample.—(adv.)

THREE ARE HURT AS STREET CAR AND AUTO CRASH

Three persons were injured Saturday night in a head-on collision between an automobile in which they were riding and a street car on Stewart avenue, near Elbert street.

Those injured were H. W. Perry and Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Travis, all of Fayetteville.

According to the report of Patrolman W. M. Gower, who investigated the accident, the street car was going north on Stewart avenue and was being operated by Motorman J. B. Lewis, and the automobile, driven by Perry, was going south on the thoroughfare when the crash occurred. A case of drunk and operating an automobile was docketed against Perry at police headquarters.

Mr. and Mrs. Travis were occupants of Perry's machine. The trio received only slight bruises as the result of the impact.

CHANGES ORDERED BY RADIO BOARD

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—To eliminate interference in broadcasting, the federal radio commission today ordered stations WWJ, of the Detroit News, and WOC, of the Palmer School of Chiropractics at Davenport, Iowa, to exchange operating frequencies.

Station WWJ, which has been operating on 800 kilocycles, was assigned 850 kilocycles and WOC reduced from 850 to 800. The interference was said to have existed between WGY, of Schenetady, on 729 kilocycles and WWJ, on the one hand, and between WLS, of Chicago, on 870 kilocycles and WOC on 850.

Station WTMJ, of the Milwaukee Journal, was authorized to operate full time on a 1,020 kilocycles channel and station WHAD, of Marquette university, Milwaukee, had its frequency changed from 1,020 to 1,110 kilocycles.

Station WHAD also was ordered to divide time with station WSOE, of the School of Engineering of Milwaukee.

MORVEN AND BARWICK SCHOOLS ARE OPEN

Quitman, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Morven and Barwick schools have opened the regular fall session with a splendid enrollment and bright prospects. These two schools will have a full nine months' term. Empress has also opened it fall term.

All schools in Brooks county, it is believed, will supplement the seven and one-half-month term. The faculties have been elected for all the county schools.

County Superintendent W. J. Cooey has been ill for some time but the entire work of preparation for the fall term was completed before he took his bed. He is better and his friends hope he will soon be out again.

All details of transportation have been worked out and the children are now waiting for the bell to ring on the first day's school term except those few schools which have already opened.

Gold's Perennial Lure

:: Hunt for Precious Metal Carries On at Dahlonega ::

Is Undying In Georgia

The lure of gold, which has drawn men from Africa to the Klondike, has brought renewed efforts to find the metal in Georgia in commercial quantites, Dr. S. W. McCallie, state geologist, said Saturday following a recent trip to Dahlonega.

"A Canadian concern," Dr. McCallie said, "is sinking a number of shafts on locations about two miles from Dahlonega in the hope of finding enormous quantities of low-grade ore."

Gold production began in Georgia in 1838, Dr. McCallie said, and since that time the total production has been worth about $18,000,000. The largest year's production in this state, he says, was in 1845, when gold valued at $501,295 was found in four of the gold belts of the state.

"The Canadian concern," the state geologist says, "hopes to find enormous quantities of low-grade ore. To this end the concern is sinking a number of shafts in the vicinity of Dahlonega. A crew of about 15 to 20 men is sinking the shafts, and the company, I am informed, has taken option on half a dozen different tracts in that vicinity. The success of their search remains to be learned, but it stands to reason that the findings thus far have been encouraging, else no further excavations would be made.

May Revive Industry.

"I am hopeful that this prospecting will bear fruit and thus revive the gold industry in Georgia, which has already brought something like $18,000,000. It is indeed encouraging to see large concerns doing this sort of work in Georgia," he said.

"There are four so-called 'gold belts' in Georgia. One of them extends from western Rabun county through White, Lumpkin, Dawson, Cherokee, Paulding and Haralson counties in a southwesterly direction. It is known as the Dahlonega belt.

"Another begins in Hall county, and from this county takes its name as the Hall county belt, extends likewise in a southwesterly direction through a strip of Rabun, Habersham, Hall, Forsythe, Milton and Fulton counties. The third, the Villa Rica belt, goes through Douglas and Carroll counties, and the fourth, the Lincoln county belt, is in Lincoln and McDuffie counties. The belts are very narrow strips which in the past, however, produced quite a lot of gold.

"The gold strike in California in 1849 was a blow to the industry in Georgia, since many of the best gold diggers went there. And it may be said that some of the most successful of the 'forty-niners' who trekked across the nation to the California gold field were Georgians. The world war, with its high wages and increased living expenses, resulted in conditions unfavorable for gold prospecting. But it would seem now that interest in gold in Georgia is being revived," he declared.

Brantley Revival.

Buena Vista, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Rev. Frances Hatcliff, one of the evangelists of the South Georgia conference, is conducting a revival at the Brantley Methodist church. Rev. W. J. McCleuny is in charge of the revival.

DR. DINWIDDIE SUES PAPER FOR $100,000

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—A libel suit for $100,000 was entered here today by the Rev. E. C. Dinwiddie, prohibition worker, against the publishers of the Washington Herald as a result of publication of a series of articles recently in the Hearst newspapers on the activities of the Anti-Saloon league. Mr. Dinwiddie objected to references made to him in one of the stories.

BAINBRIDGE SCHOOLS TO OPEN ON MONDAY

Bainbridge, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The 1927-1928 term of local schools begins here Monday morning with E. G. Elcan, superintendent, in charge. A heavy enrollment is being made and it is thought that this term will be outstanding in increased attendance

MRS. EMILY WILLEY LEAVES $500,000 TO THREE NIECES

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Chicago, September 10.—Mrs. Emily Preston Willey, who died last April, left an estate of approximately $500,000, according to an inventory which has been filed in the probate court.

The bulk of the estate was left in trust for three nieces. They are Mrs. Lavencia Eaton, Mrs. Elizabeth Eaton-Dubuy and Mrs. Louise Eaton-Hunsacker, all of Danville, N. Y.

TWO INJURED WHEN AUTOMOBILES CRASH

Lewis Thomas, of Buckhead, and Hoyl Adams, of a Howell Mill road address, received minor cuts and bruises about the body Saturday night in a collision between the automobile in which they were riding and a car driven by H. D. Holleman, of 327 Sixth street. The accident occurred in front of 1050 Spring street.

Adams was driving the automobile in which he and Thomas were riding and is said to have driven into the rear of Holleman's machine.

Both cars were slightly damaged.

LOS ANGELES MOVIE STRIKE IS AVERTED

Los Angeles, September 10.—(AP)—A strike of Los Angeles theater employees which had been set for midnight tonight was declared averted today by H. B. Franklin, spokesman for the theater managers. He announced an agreement had been reached with the stage hands and motion picture machine operators' unions, based on wage increases granted them.

A settlement with the musicians, who had demanded a six-day week and 10 per cent increase, was expected.

VALDOSTA COLLEGE OPENS TOMORROW

Valdosta, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The Georgia State Woman's college dormitories and administration buildings have been made ready for the opening of the college on Monday, September 12.

At the office of Dr. R. H. Powell, the president, it was stated that the coming term has a brighter promise of attendance and excellent work than any of the previous years. Among the members of the faculty already here for the opening, there is an atmosphere of optimism never before experienced at the college since its initial opening.

In years past because of the growing needs of the college it was operated at a loss, entailing a deficiency of $79,000, a debt which pressed heavily upon the authorities. When the present legislature passed a deficiency bill covering this sum and providing the money, the troubles of the college were swept aside and with a registration now up to capacity and freedom from financial worries, as the maintenance fund has also been increased, the college is going ahead with greater momentum than ever before.

SHORTER COLLEGE TO OPEN TUESDAY

Rome, Ga., September 10.—(AP)—The fifty-fifth annual session of Shorter college here will begin Tuesday, September 13, according to announcement made by President W. D. Furry. The school head said he was pleased with the prospects for the 1927-28 session.

Freshmen will arrive in advance of upper classmen, who will not come in until Friday of the opening week. During the first three days the new students will be familiarized with rules of self government, standards, ideals and class work through talks by the president and Miss Mildred Mell, dean of women.

A number of faculty changes were announced by President Furry. They included:

Dr. Bertha E. Martin, M. A. Mount Holyoke college, Ph. D., University of Chicago, to be head of the department of biology, assisted by Miss Dorothy Morton, A. B., Shorter.

Professor Paul S. McConnell, M. A., University of California, to succeed Dr. Arthur S. Sloan as professor of Spanish. Professor McConnell has completed his work for the degree of Ph. D. at Princeton.

Dr. E. L. Porter to return as head of the department of chemistry after a year's leave of absence. He was awarded his Ph. D. degree by Rice institute, Texas, in June.

Miss Louise K. Ruggles, who has done work in the Posse Nissen School of Physical Education, Boston, and at Harvard Summer School of Physical Education, to become head of the department of physical education.

Miss Odelle Moore, A. B., Shorter, to be assistant in the department of physics and mathematics.

PRESIDENT URGES LINCOLN AS MODEL

Brookings, S. D., September 10.—(AP)—Greater emphasis by educational institutions in the development of character was urged by President Coolidge in speaking here today at the dedication of the Lincoln Memorial library of the South Dakota State College. Lincoln, he held up as a model for the youth of today.

"Unless our halls of learning are real temples," he declared, "which are to be approached by our youth in an attitude of reverence, consecrated by worship of the truth, they will all end in a delusion.

"Our colleges must teach not only science, but character. Our institutions of learning must be dedicated to a higher purpose. The life of our nation must rise to a higher realm."

Dodges Farm Relief.

Stopping here on his journey from this great agricultural region, which he has made his residence for three months, the president gave another of praise to South Dakota but he maintained his silence on the controversal farm relief problem.

With him on the speaker's platform at the outdoor exercises were senators Norbeck and McMaster, of South Dakota, and the congressional delegation of the state, all leaders in the fight for the McNary-Haugen farm bill, which Coolidge vetoed.

They bade him farewell at the station as the special train headed eastward and thanked him heartily for his visit here but as on all previous occasions throughout the summer, their discussions touched in no way on their differences over agricultural legislation.

Referring to South Dakota in his address, the president said:

"We cannot fail to stand in respectful admiration for a people whose courage and ability have been crowned with remarkable accomplishments."

"But this is only typical of the growth and progress of the west and the west is only typical of the growth and progress of America."

Degree Given Coolidge.

Coolidge addressed a large and attentive audience which stood under an overcast sky on the campus grounds. When he had concluded, Charles W. Pugsley, president of the college, conferred on the president the degree of doctor of science on behalf of the school.

Because it is the custom in western institutions to keep all ceremonies "as simple and democratic as posible," Pugsley explained, this accounted for the absence of caps and gowns.

The degree was given, he said, "as a slight recognition of appreciation of your services to the nation and to the state college on this momentous occasion."

Departing from the prepared program, Pugsley then introduced Mrs. Coolidge and John Coolidge, son of the president and each stepped to the front of the platform, smiling to the greetings of applause.

Then the president and Mrs. Coolidge laid a memorial stone in the outdoor theater on the campus which is to be known as Coolidge Sylvan theater.

Does Better Job.

"I hope I do a better job than he does," Mrs. Coolidge laughed as she and the president were handed trowels with which to spread mortar at opposite corners of the stone. The crowd cheered as she finished first.

Stressing the necessity for spiritual development in education in his address, Mr. Coolidge also eulogized Abraham Lincoln, who, he recalled, signed the bill authorizing the grant of land for establishment of colleges of agriculture in the various states.

"I cannot conceive that the object of Abraham Lincoln was merely to instruct men how to raise more corn, to feed more hogs, to get more money, to buy more land, and so on, in the expanding circle as the story goes. Of course he wanted to teach men how to raise more corn, but his main object must have been to raise better men.

"There is something more in learning and something more in life than a mere knowledge of science, a mere acquisition of wealth, a mere striving for place and honor. Our colleges will fail in their duty to their students unless they are able to inspire them with a broader understanding of the spiritual meaning of science, of literature and of the arts.

"We must maintain a stronger, firmer grasp on the principle declared in the Psalms of David and reechoed in the Proverbs of his son, Solomon, that 'the fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge.'"

Junior League Girls to Act as Hostesses At Opening of Rich's New "Home Interiors"

A group of Junior League girls who will serve as hostesses for the opening of the "home interiors" of the M. Rich & Bros. Co., in the charming living room of the model living quarters. Left to right, Mrs. Arthur Clark, Miss Margaret Nelson, Miss Louise Nelson, standing; Mrs. William Huger, Mrs. Humphrey Wagar and Mrs. Bruce Woodruff.

Introducing its new "home interiors," model rooms furnished in ideal style in the furniture department on the fifth floor, the M. Rich & Bros. company, Monday will throw open this innovation for the first time to the public, with members of the Atlanta Junior league acting as official hostesses.

The organization of young society women has undertaken to sponsor the "home interiors" during the period of their introduction to the shopping public, and will be on hand to welcome all visitors during Monday and Tuesday from 9 o'clock in the morning until 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon, and during Wednesday morning.

The Junior league members will answer questions relating to the "home interiors" in addition to acting as a reception body. In addition to the leaguers, experts from Rich's furniture and interior decorating departments will be on hand constantly to make suggestions along lines of furnishing homes.

Junior league members who will serve as hostesses, and the times at which they will be at the "home interiors" follow: Monday morning, Mrs. W. E. Hager, Mrs. Bruce Woodruff, Miss Margaret Nelson. Monday afternoon, Mrs. Walter Wellborn, Miss Callie Orme, Miss Louise Nelson.

Luther A. Whitehead, Road Board Employee, Killed Near Winder

Winder, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Luther A. Whitehead, an employee of the state highway department, was instantly killed Friday when he fell from a highway truck while working on route No. 11, between Winder and Monroe. The crew with whom he was working had just quit for dinner and he was riding on a truck driven by Farrish Harbin and was coming towards Bethlehem.

He was standing on the running board holding his dinner with one hand and holding to the truck with the other. A small puff of wind blew his hat off and he loosed his hold on the truck to catch it, lost his balance and was pitched forward from the truck, falling on his head and breaking his neck, dying instantly. His body was immediately brought to Winder by C. M. Ferguson.

Besides his widow, who was Miss Vera Thompson, he is survived by two children, Harold and Hugh Whitehead; his father, Nelson Whitehead; four brothers, Love and Lon Whitehead, of Gainesville, and Glenn Whitehead, of Jackson county; Loy and three sisters, Mrs. L. P. Eley and Mrs. Glenn Walls, of Winder, and Mrs. Billups Elder, of Jackson county.

RELATIVES SEEK MISSING FATHER OF WARM SPRINGS

Relatives of M. M. Allen, 72, of Warm Springs, Ga., have requested The Constitution to aid in a search for Mr. Allen who left the home of his son, A. J. Allen, with whom he resided, on August 17 and has not been heard from since.

He was last seen on the Atlanta-Newnan highway and is said to have been picked up by a passing motorist who was coming to Atlanta. Efforts to locate him since the date of his disappearance have been futile.

He was approximately 6 feet tall and weighed about 135 pounds. His hair is sandy gray and he wears a short beard. Relatives state that he usually wears his short collar unbuttoned and has a cancer on his chest.

Any information regarding his whereabouts will be gratefully received by J. T. Alexander, of 294 Tenth street, Atlanta.

AFTER 25 YEARS ALLEGED SLAYER REPORTED CAUGHT

Little Rock, Ark., September 10. (AP)—After evading arrest for a quarter of a century, John G. Dunn, wanted in Johnson county, Arkansas, for the slaying of a sheriff and the robbery of a bank, was reported today under arrest in Reno, Nevada, his capture brought about by a chance remark about the crime.

A telegram to a representative of detectives employed by the Arkansas Bankers association told of the capture of Dunn in the Nevada city. Whether he will return voluntarily to answer to the charge of murder was not known here.

In the shooting which attended the bank robbery, John Powers, Johnson county sheriff, was killed. Two of Dunn's accomplices were captured and hanged. A fourth member of the band was sent to the Arkansas penitentiary, but escaped several years later. He now is serving a sentence in a Canadian prison for robbery.

Dunn escaped and his whereabouts remained a mystery until a word or two dropped in conversation several days ago led to an investigation and brought the almost forgotten crime to light.

1,000 MORE PUPILS IN COUNTY SYSTEM

An increase of 1,000 students over last year's enrollment was noted in Fulton county school registration, Jere Wells, superintendent, announced Saturday. The county schools will open Monday morning for class work with approximately 8,500 in the county system proper and 3,000 more in East Point and College Park.

In discusing the registration for the new term, Mr. Wells said:

"Every school in the Fulton county system showed an increase on the opening day Friday, with the exception of Cascade, Hemphill, and Mt. Vernon. Cascade showed a decrease of eleven, Hemphill a decrease of nine, and Mt. Vernon a decrease of three.

"The total increase of this year over last year was 610, which does not include the enrollment of Marion Smith school which is delayed on account of the building being incompleted. The opening on the first day of Marion Smith last year was 400 students. There will be an increase this year. This shows that there will be approximately an increase of 1,000 students in the white schools this year over last year. The colored schools show an increase of 154 over last year.

Fulton Gains 100.

"We can hardly tell what the increase at Fulton High will be because the first year students and the student coming to Fulton for the first time were required to report to the school yesterday. This showed an increase of about 100 more than the first year students last year. There were about 700 reporting to Fulton High yesterday with at least 200 more former students to report on Monday. Indications point to an increase at Fulton High of over 200 over the enrollment last year.

"The school of College Park, according to report of Superintendent C. R. Brown, will have a substantial increase and there were 870 white students and 237 colored to report on Friday. This will very likely reach 1,000 and 250 colored students before the end of the next week. East Point shows an enrollment of 1,355 white students. The colored students of East Point will not report until Monday morning, but we are expecting 350 colored students in East Point.

"There will be approximately 8,500 students in the Fulton county system proper with approximately 3,000 in East Point and College Park which will show an increase between 1,000 and 1,200 over last year for the entire system. Additional teachers for the anticipated crowded schools having been provided for the teachers will be ready to begin their regular classroom work Monday morning. There will be a few transfers necessary to relieve the crowded conditions in the schools."

August Record Business Month At Brown Tire Co.

Announcing that August of this year was the biggest business month in the six years' history of his concern, J. C. Brown, owner of the Brown Tire company at 131 Ivy street, N. E., Saturday predicted a prosperous fall and winter for the tire trade in Atlanta and for business generally.

"Up to August," Mr. Brown stated, "our biggest month was July of 1925, when the price of tires was extremely high. Despite the fact that during August of this year the price of the same tires was only about half of what it was in July, 1925, this company went considerably ahead of the business total of the latter month, which means that we handled more than twice the volume of merchandise during August, 1927.

"So far September has gone ahead of August, and I am looking for a big fall and winter business. I cannot see anything but improvement and good times for Atlanta generally and I am laying my plans to have the Brown Tire company at all times abreast of the times and able to meet all demands made upon it by its patrons."

The Brown company offers a complete tire service and specializes in lubrication. It has special equipment for this latter work, including an Alemite gun of 3,000 pounds pressure operated by a white mechanic. It has vacuum-cleaning equipment, one of the best vulcanizing plants in the south and a spacious parking lot in the rear of its building.

The company handles Diamond tires and Goodrich truck tires, offering day and night service to press on the latter.

MIDDLE GEORGIA A. & M. COLLEGE TRUSTEES NAMED

This school formerly was the Twelfth District Agricultural and Mechanical college but its name was changed in a bill which was passed by the legislature at its recent session.

The trustees named Saturday by Governor Hardman are as follows: From the state at large, R. F. Burch, Eastman; C. D. Rountree, Wrightsville; Judge Eschol Graham, McRae; S. A. Nunn, Perry, and J. C. Page, Dublin. From Bleckley county, J. P. Peacock, T. D. Watkins and H. McWhorter, all of Cochran.

Georgia Savings Bank And Trust Company Reports Banner Year

A gain of 57 per cent in the number of accounts carried on its books was reported last week to stockholders of the Georgia Savings Bank and Trust company in the annual report of its officials. The report set forth that accounts on August 31, 1927, the end of the fiscal year, totaled 12,476 as compared to 7,923 last year, an increase of 4,553. Deposits on August 31 were $3,963,978 as against $3,423,891 last year, a gain of $540,087. The increase in accounts is the largest in the history of the bank, the report added.

During the past year depositors were paid interest amounting to $126,012 and stockholders were paid $70,000 in dividends of 14 per cent. This represented an increase of 2 per cent over dividends of last year. Earnings were $118,013 against $110,198 last year. The surplus was increased from $350,000 to $400,000 during the year.

All directors and officers of the bank, which was organized in 1899 and is a member of the federal reserve system, were reelected. The complete list of these follows: George M. Brown, president; Joseph E. Boston, vice president and trust officer; W. Stuart Witham, Jr., vice president; John E. Oliver, secretary and treasurer; Charles P. Hunter, assistant secretary and treasurer. Directors: E. Bates Block, Arnold Broyles, George M. Brown, F. J. Cooledge, John W. Grant, Frank Hawkins, John L. Tye, W. Stuart Witham, Jr., Joseph E. Boston, George M. Brown, Jr., John E. Oliver.

Hotel and Restaurant Co. Located in New Home

The Hotel and Restaurant Supply company, one of the old houses in the south dealing especially in equipment for restaurants, cafeterias and hotel and institution kitchens and dining rooms, has occupied its new quarters at 382 West Peachtree street during the past week, having removed from its former quarters on East Alabama street which it has occupied for a number of years.

The new quarters, in addition to giving additional sales and storage space for the rapidly expanding business of the concern, also furnishes it with an ideal display fronting on West Peachtree and a general sales floor of large size where its various lines of equipment can be seen to advantage.

This company has recently been awarded a number of important equipment contracts for new restaurants and hotels in the south, one of the most important of which was the complete kitchen installation of the Hotel Candler, which opens Monday in Decatur.

War Mothers To Sponsor Veterans' Sale, Sept. 22

"Forget-Me-Not" day will fall this year on Thursday, September 22. For the past six years, Atlantans have been wearing a blue flower in their button holes as a mark of tribute to the men who fought and bled in France but returned home again bearing a permanent disability. The proceeds of the sale of flowers go directly to the relief of these men and their families.

The flower sale is conducted for the Woodrow Wilson chapter of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War. All relief funds that are realized are expended by the executive committee of this organization. It is sponsored by the Gold Star Legion, the beloved "war mothers" of Atlanta.

Mrs. H. M. Nicholes has been appointed general chairman of the day by Mrs. Sam D. Jones, rpesident of the Gold Star Legion. She served in this capacity last year and has made a notable record as an organizer. She will also serve as general chairman for the entire state of Georgia.

Officials of the Woodrow Wilson chapter, who are to have direct charge of the relief work provided by the sale, include Frank R. Fling, commander; Gladstone Pitts, senior vice commander; Robert Williamson, Jr., junior vice commander; John Hollams, officer of the day; M. J. Wager, sergeant-at-arms. The executive committee, which also acts as relief committee, is composed of J. K. Finch, chairman; H. C. Gray, M. J. Wager, W. J. Folsom, L. S. Bellinger and F. R. Fling.

Commander Fling and members of the executive committee met Friday with Mrs. Nicholes to arrange the preliminary details of organization for the forget-me-not sale. The sum of $3,700 was realized last year, and an attempt will be made on the twenty-second to exceed this sum and reach the $5,000 mark. To do this, as large a selling organization as possible will be set up.

Mrs. Nicholes reported the active cooperation of a large number of women's organizations in the city who have agreed to form committees for the work. A number of other clubs and societies are expected to join forces with the committee within the next few days. Flowers will be on sale at every vantage point in the business and residential districts through the assistance of these clubs.

The tremendous need for relief funds was stressed Saturday by William E. Tate, national commander of the D. A. V. Mr. Tate, who is an old Atlanta boy, and a member of the Woodrow Wilson chapter, is at present visiting his home here on a brief vacation from his headquarters work in Cincinnati.

JACOBS' FOURTEENTH DRUG STORE OPENED

The fourteenth store in the chain of the Jacobs Pharmacy company, veteran Atlanta business concern headed by Dr. Joseph Jacobs, Saturday opened its doors to the public at Peachtree and Ellis streets, in the heart of one of the city's most rapidly developing commercial centers.

The unit is a complete drug store in every detail, having a large stock of general merchandise and a prescription department in charge of a licensed pharmacist. Stewart Murray, Inc., operates a soda fount in the store.

The fourteenth Jacobs pharmacy is one of the most attractively arranged and furnished in the entire chain. Its exterior is magnificently fitted with heavy glass in diamond panes, and the furnishings on the interior are tastefully designed and conveniently arranged.

Officials of the Jacobs Pharmacy company Saturday invited friends of the concern, particularly those in the vicinity of the new store, to patronize it. It was established, they pointed out, in order to meet a need arising as a result of the growth of the business neighborhood.

JURY FINDS REESE, SUICIDE, VICTIM OF DERANGEMENT

The death Friday afternoon of F. B. Reese, 52-year-old carpenter, of East Point, was pronounced by a coroner's jury Saturday as the result of "self-inflicted gunshot wound while mentally deranged."

Ignoring the protests of wife and daughter, Reese walked into a bedroom and discharged a shotgun into his chest. Death was instantaneous.

Surviving members of the little family, who live at 303 Hendrix avenue, include the widow and three daughters, Sarah, Mildred and Virginia.

Funeral arrangements had not been completed at a late hour Saturday night. They will be announced later by A. C. Hemperley and Sons, funeral directors.

MACON TO CONDUCT GOOD-WILL TOURS

Macon, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Forty or more Macon citizens will take part in a series of five good-will tours, the first of which will be run September 13-15. The party, traveling in large busses and accompanied by a band, will visit a large number of cities and towns in middle and south Georgia, according to the announced itinerary which is as follows:

First day: Fort Valley, Marshallville, Montezuma, Ellaville, Americus, Dawson and Albany.

Second day: Sylvester, Tifton, Adel, Hahira, Nashville, Fitzgerald, Ocilla and Douglas.

Third day: Alma, Baxley, Lyons, Vidalia, Mount Vernon, Soperton and Dublin. All intervening points will be visited.

The tours are being sponsored by the retail merchants' bureau of the Macon Chamber of Commerce and leading citizens in all lines of business are being invited to join the party.

The purpose of the trip is to acquaint Macon business men with the progress and activity of the state.

JARRETT BENFORD CLEMENCY DENIED

The Georgia prison commission on September 7 disapproved a clemency application for Jarrett Benford, serving a life sentence for an assualt on an aged Jones county woman, it was learned Saturday when the documents were filed in the governor's office.

Benford originally was sentenced to die June 27, 1924. Governor Walker commuted the sentence to life imprisonment.

Wade Johnson, a companion of Benford, also was sentenced to death. His case is on appeal in federal court.

BABY HEALTH CENTERS ANNOUNCED FOR WEEK

Dr. J. P. Kennedy, city health officer, announces the baby health centers for the week as follows: Monday, September 12, Stewart Avenue nursery; Tuesday, September 13, Luckie Street school; Wednesday, September 14, Fair Street school; Thursday, September 15, Andrew Stewart nursery; Friday, September 16, Kirkwood school.

All centers open promptly at 1:30 p. m.

Head of Newest Church to Tell Tenets Tonight

Tenets of the new Liberal Catholic church, a unit of which has recently been established in Atlanta, will be outlined Sunday night by the Rt. Rev. Irving S. Cooper, of Los Angeles, Calif., in a lecture to be delivered at 7:45 o'clock in the temporary quarters of the church at 627 Peachtree street.

Bishop Cooper arrived in Atlanta Saturday after a tour which has included the larger cities of the country and discussed the spread of this church throughout the United States.

"Our church is one that makes a primary appeal to those persons who are not now members of any church," he said. "We do not seek to take communicants from any of the established churches, although we have in our membership people who formerly were members of these churches. In the United States today there are about 70,000,000 people out of the 120,000,000 population who are not church members. We welcome people from all the churches to our services and whenever we find any pastor or priest or other officer of any other church who has some idea of value to us we invite such to speak in our pulpits."

There is no connection of any kind between the Liberal Catholic church and the organization headed by Mrs. Annie Besant, of which Krishnamura, an East Indian, is hailed as a second messiah according to Bishop Cooper.

"Mrs. Besant, however, has preached in our church and she makes a remarkable talk," he said. 'I met Krishnamura in India and he also is a man with an amazing personality. I believe he is destined to perfect his plan of organizing a reformed Buddhist church in India."

The subject of Bishop Cooper's talk Sunday night will be "The Religious Reformation in America Today." He is the head of the new church in the United States, Canada and the possessions of the United States. After leaving Atlanta he will visit the West Indies and South America.

STRANGER IN CITY PAYS $60 TO LEARN MAGICIAN'S TRICK

James Hickman, of Sanford, N. C., paid $60 to see a stranger's magic tricks. Hickman was waiting for his train at the Terminal station. He made a chance acquaintance. Conversation turned to sleight-of-hand and the newcomer boasted of his dexterity. He even offered to prove it.

Hickman lent his wallet for a "disappearing" act. Eyeing the other's mystic motions, Hickman turned to greet a fellow who hailed him from behind. Hickman did not know the man. Meanwhile his magician had vanished.

This story, as related at headquarters, was new to Atlanta police.

WILLIAM D. BEATIE, MRS. WHITEHEAD WED IN NEW YORK

William David Beatie, prominent Atlanta real estate dealer, and Mrs. Ola Coynes Whitehead, of New York, were married recently in that city at the St. Nicholas church, according to advices reaching friends here.

Mr. Beatie, who is a native of Bloomington, Ill., has been an important figure in local real estate circles for many years. He has directed extensive south side developments in Capitol View and Stewart avenue sections. He is secretary-treasurer of the Suburban Realty company, the Stewart Investment company and the Mutual Home Builders, Inc.

The former Mrs. Whitehead is the daughter of Robert and Kitty Horton Coynes, of Atlanta. She has been living in New York for the past few years.

HOLD-UP VICTIM IDENTIFIES MAN AS GANG MEMBER

Held in Fulton Tower on a robbery warrant following his arrest Friday night, M. F. Clay was identified Saturday by A. W. Watters as one of a gang which held him up and robbed him of a $2,000 diamond several months ago, according to officers.

Clay was jointly indicted with John Willie Wright at a session of the Fulton grand jury recently, Wright having been recognized by Mr. Watters when the latter paid a visit to a Fulton county convict camp.

Eight men were lined up before Mr. Watters, and he picked Clay out of the group as one of the robbers without a moment's hesitation, it was reported. Clay was arrested by Deputy Sheriffs Joe Schillings and Lee Whatley.

LEVINE TO SEEK DISTANCE RECORD

London, September 10.—(United News.) — Flooded with protests against his repeatedly reiterated intention to attempt a westward flight across the Atlantic, Charles A. Levine, owner of the monoplane Columbia, announced tonig t that he might cancel the venture.

He and Captain Walter Hinchliffe, engaged to pilot the Columbia to New York, said, however, that they propably would take the plane to India in an attempt to break the world's distance record. A cablegram from Mrs. Levine, imploring her husband not to fly home, was received shortly before his announcement.

Asked if the trans-Atlantic flight had been called off, Levine replied:

"Well, I suppose we shall have to this season, but I can't say definitely, because we may go within a couple of days."

The cable from his wife was understood to have read as follows:

"Implore you to make no attempt to fly home. Use boat. Love. Kisses. (Signed) Grace."

After conferring with officials at the air ministry and setting Thursday as the tentative date of his flight to Karachi, India, Levine issued the following statement:

"In view of the lateness of the season, failure of recent attempts and public condemnation of those flights on the grounds that they were a useless waste of life, Hinchliffe and I have decided that unless the weather is favorable by Monday we shall abandon our attempt to fly to America this year.

"Instead we plan to start eastward early next week and will attempt to break the world's endurance and long-distance records at the same time.

"I consider our decision in the best interests of aviation.

"This is the equinoctial season and meteorologists have advised me that it is almost impossible to get a stretch of 36 hours during which the weather would be favorable for our flight to America.

"They are of the unanimous opinion that such a flight would now be worse than foolhardy and advised us to postpone it until next May.

"I am convinced that the three recent failures were not the results of mechanical faults, but more probably due to atmospheric conditions."

SAFER SEA FLYING PICTURED BY NAVY

Washington, September 10.—(United News.)—The end of American trans-oceanic flights in land planes by Americans seems in sight.

Opposition to the dangerous flights such as have claimed nearly a score of lives in the last three months, came today from all federal officials connected with aviation. As word came that some of the fliers and the cities promoting the prize contests were beginning to retreat, the navy reviewed its possibilities for a wide development of sea flying along safer and more scientific lines, in great flying boats with two or four air-cooled motors each.

Favors Abolition.

Admiral E. W. Eberle, acting navy secretary, characterized as "excellent and sound" recommendations of Lieutenant B. H. Wyatt, Dole-Hawaiian flight inspector, that long-distance, over-water flights by land planes be stopped.

Rear Admiral W. A. Moffett, naval aviation chief, told the United News of three great flying boats now under development, and Captain C. H. Land, aviation expert, described the navy's services to national defense and commercial aviation through development of six new military airplanes, which are now at the point where they can be produced in large quantities in case of a national emergency.

Admiral Moffett told of the following large flying boat program:

Air-cooled motors are to replace water-cooled engines in the three great PN-10 seaplanes, and if the experiment is successful, 20 more will be ordered. A PN-11 boat to carry two or three newly-designed air-cooled motors of more than 500 horsepower, each nearly three times as powerful as the single engine that carried Lindbergh across the Atlantic, is being built for test flights next year. A monoplane flying boat with similar super-powered air-cooled motors is being planned. All-metal construction is to be used on some of the boats.

Bomber Is Being Built.

Another ship already perfected, a bomber being built in San Diego, could carry gasoline and passengers on a trip to Hawaii in comparative safety, Moffett said.

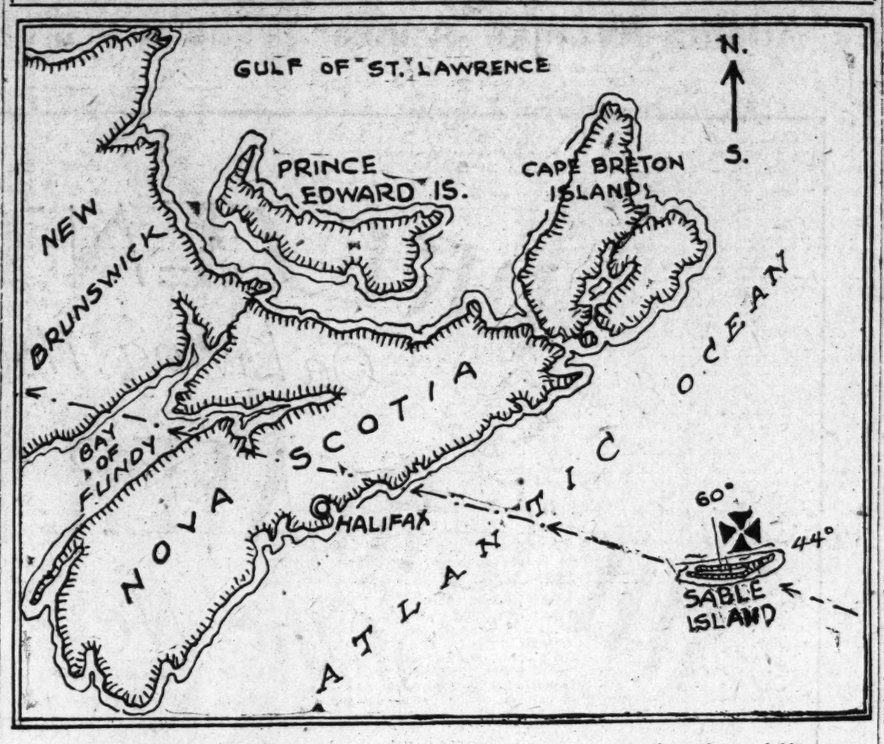

"The navy has flown the Atlantic; it flew nearly to Hawaii; it flew to Panama, and it makes regular flights from Panama to San Diego, all without losing a single plane," he said.

Lieutenant Wyatt, who was loaned to the commerce department to make the Dole flight inspections, said in his report that such flights "must ultimately end in disaster." He opposed both the use of land planes and ships lacking complete sending and receiving radio apparatus and competent navigators.

Scientific value cannot be derived from such ill-prepared and hazardous attempts, especially over ground already covered by the Lindberghs, Byrds and Maitlands, Wyatt believed.

Captain Land's report listed new developments, including two modern battleship fighting planes, a bombing plane, observation, training and patrol planes, of which some 297 are now ordered under the navy's five-year 1,000-plane aviation program.

Where French Aces May Have Landed

This map shows Sable island, 20 miles from which was the landing place of Nungesser and Coli, French aces, flying to New York, according to a note reported found in a bottle tossed on French soil by the sea. Vessels from Halifax and other points will make an investigation. As the note is said to have been dated May, 1927, there is little chance the fliers are still living, even should the note be found to be authentic. The mother of Nungesser is reported to have recognized the handwriting as that of her son.

NUNGESSER, COLI MESSAGE REPORTED

venting further long distance flights over water, in a report by Lieutenant Ben H. Wyatt of the committee that inspected the Dole flight planes.

After the navy department had forbidden his assistants to engage in the Paris flight, Captain Rene Fonck cancelled his plans. Levine's statement in London that he would abandon his flight to America unless conditions improved by Monday was followed by his assertion that he and his pilot, Captain Walter Hinchcliffe, might fly eastward next week in attempts to break the world's endurance and long distance flying records.

There was dissent, however, from two quarters. In Dublin Captain Robert MacIntosh is awaiting favorable conditions to start his airplane Princess Xenia toward America. Ruth Elder, 23-year-old aviatrix, announced at Tampa, Fla., her determination to carry out her intention to attempt to fly from New York to Paris.

The wife of Edward F. Schlee, co-pilot of the Pride of Detroit, petitioned the navy department to interfere with the "suicidal" plan of the round-the-world fliers to jump across the Pacific.

The Windsor-to-Windsor flight of "Duke" Schiller and Phil Wood was definitely abandoned as well as the pilot's proposal to search for Old Glory, and plans were made for a return from Harbor Grace, N. F., to Windsor, Ont.

ST. RAPHAEL REPORTS ARE UNSUBSTANTIATED.

Paris, September 10.—(AP)—Reports published in England that French fishermen had found two airplane wings believed to be those of the missing British plane St. Raphael, 248 miles northwest of Penmarch, Brittany, were met by the navy and air departments with the statement that they had no such information. Inquiries in shipping quarters drew a similar reply.

GARBLED OLD GLORY REPORT GROUNDLESS.

Halifax, N. S., September 10.—(AP) The Canadian government and various wireless stations today had received no further word of the missing American monoplane, Old Glory, from which nothing has been heard since she sent out her S O S call Wednesday morning.

Garbled wireless messages, giving rise to a report that the Old Glory had been sighted, were received last night, but hope for the rescue of the plane, was quickly dissipated.

These messages directed Halifax officials to request Canadian vessels to search for the plane, stating that it had been sighted 400 miles east northeast of St. Johns. It was learned soon afterwards that this referred to sighting the plane before she sent out her S O S and that the request for Canadian vessels to search for her was a delayed one, instituted by American officials.

CAPTAIN MacINTOSH UNDAUNTED BY DANGER.

Dublin, Irish Free State, September 10.—(AP)—Coincidental with announcement that Captain Anthony Wreford has withdrawn from the projected trans-Atlantic flight with Captain Robert MacIntosh, pilot of the airplane, "Princess Xenia," MacIntosh today emphatically declared, "I definitely mean to take this flight."

"All this talk about the danger of flying is absurd," he said. "I admit it must be controlled, but certain people are pushing off with machines unable to do the job.

"My machine can last the range. I have had full tests in the air and on the ground, and have full confidence in Colonel Fitzmaurice, who is going along with me as a brother pilot, instead of Wreford. I honestly think that though the season is normally too late for flying, we shall have a late summer."

Colonel Fitzmaurice is an officer in the Free State air force and a well-known flier.

Captain MacIntosh said that Wreford had withdrawn reluctantly, but became convinced that he would prove unequal to the work on the heavily laden machine owing to the effects of his war wounds.

GIVON TO WITHDRAW HIS BLUEBIRD.

Paris, September 10.—(AP)—Leon Givon's biplane bluebird will probably be withdrawn from the trans-Atlantic race, it was learned on good authority today.

Givon and his companion, Piere Corbu, are still anxious to try their luck, but the Farman company, realizing the probability of less favorable weather as the season advances, has about decided to turn the plane over to its commercial lines for the winter European passenger traffic.

It is considered likely also that Paul Tarascon's monoplane Tango Bird and Dieudonne Costes' biplane Nungesser-Coli will be announced within a day or two as definitely out of the race until next year.

ROYAL WINDSOR ABANDONS FLIGHT.

St. Johns, N. F., September 10.—Phil Wood and G. A. Schiller have decided definitely to abandon their flight to Windsor, Eng., in the monoplane Royal Windsor.

UNABLE TO CHARTER VESSEL FOR FLIERS

Tokio, September 10.—J. V. Walker, Tokio representative of William S. Brock and Edward F. Schlee, told The Associated Press today that thus far he had been unable to charter a vessel to take the two Detroit fliers and their monoplane Pride of Detroit to Honolulu, and that unless the fliers attempt the hazardous flight over the Pacific to the Midway islands the round-the-world record they are attempting to break will stand.

ENGLAND MAY BAN OCEANIC FLIGHTS.

London, September 10.—Legislation to prohibit any person from financing or taking part in a trans-Atlantic flight starting in England today may be introduced into the English parliament when that body reassembles.

Harry Day, M. P. and theatrical producer, announced today he would act to discourage further trans-Atlantic flights as soon as parliament reopened.

Parliament reconvenes November 8.

Meantime, while the Irishman, McIntosh, repeated his statement that he would hold to plans for a flight from Dublin to Philadelphia there was reason to believe that he would yield to popular and pulbic disapproval of such a venture.

MISS RUTH ELDER STILL DETERMINED.

Tampa, Fla., September 10.—An American girl, flying the Stinson-Detroiter monoplane American Girl, is not frightened by recent ocean tragedies sufficiently to cancel her plans for a trans-Atlantic flight.

She is Miss Ruth Elder, of Lakeland, Fla., who arrived here from Detroit yesterday, completing the flight in 11 hours and 44 minutes. She has chosen George Maldeman to pilot her across the Atlantic, and she will go as a passenger.

could ever fly to the small Midway islands and find a safe landing."

Rosemarie Schlee, 10-year-old daughter of the Schlee family, was visiting with her grandmother in the country today, but her mother said that Rosemaire was not worried over the trip, contemplated by her father.

"Rosemarie is just as matter-of-fact as her father," said Mrs. Schlee, "and whatever her daddy thinks is right is all right with Rosemarie. She's quite confident that daddy will come back, and break the record."

Edward F. Schlee, Jr., the youngest of the Schlee family, was celebrating an anniversary. Edward is 16 months old today.

HAZARDOUS FLYING FACES BROCK, SCHLEE.

BY HAROLD P. MILLS.

Shanghai, September 10.—(United News.)—Hazardous flying such as not even the trans-Atlantic airmen encountered in their gallant ventures on the other side of the world tonight confronted William S. Brock and Edward F. Schlee of the 'round-the-world flight monoplane, Pride of Detroit.

Since arriving at Croydon airport, England, after a flight from Harbor Grace, N. F., the airmen generally have had land and mapped landmarks beneath their craft.

With their departure from Shanghai today for Tokio, Brock and Schlee will embark on the first of four water jumps aggregating 7,450 miles, one of them so dangerous as almost to defy aerial navigation and all four representing almost impossible odds against men and machine.

Fliers Reach Shanghai.

Brock and Schlee arrived over Shanghai at 5:30 p. m. today, alighting at Hungjao field in Chinese territory after circling the race track where they decided the crowd was too great to attempt a landing. The descent at Hungjao was perfect. The fliers had flown 780 miles from Hongkong.

"When do we eat?" they inquired as they emerged from their plane.

After Tokio the airmen expect to fly to Sand island, an approximately named dot among the Midway Islands 2,480 miles from Tokio in the Pacific. In every respect, this leg of the flight will be the most difficult. The problem of navigation alone will be almost insurmountable.

Beyond Sand island lies Honolulu, 1,440 miles distant and 2,400 miles further east is San Francisco. If the airmen ignore the urging to abandon their venture they must reckon with these four legs of their flight.

MAJOR OF MARINES DEFENDS MIDWAY ISLANDS.

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—Major Jeter P. Horton of the marine corps, who has served as governor of the Midway Islands, took exception today to the assertion that the islands afford no suitable landing spots for airplanes.

Should William S. Brock and Edward F. Schlee continue their round-the-world flight from Tokio, he said, they would find a straight hard beach about a mile in length on Sand island, sometimes called Eastern island. "If the Pride of Detroit should succeed in locating this small spot in the Pacific," he added, "I feel sure that she would experience no difficulty in landing."

It had been claimed that beaches of the Midway Islands were composed of soft, loose sand, in which the wheels of the plane would sink to their hubs, causing it to nose over, possibly, or certainly preventing a takeoff.

WORLD FLIGHT LOG PRIDE OF DETROIT

RENE FONCK ABANDONS FLIGHT OVER OCEAN.

New York, September 10.—(AP)—A decision definitely to abandon his plan for a nonstop trans-Atlantic flight was made known tonight by Captain Rene Fonck at a dinner given to Maxime Mongondre, French consul general in New York.

The French flier let it be known, however, that while he had abandoned his idea to attempt an ocean flight, work on his plane, the Ville de Paris, will be rushed for a flight overland in an attempt to establish a new nonstop record.

Captain Fonck said he intended to communicate with the navy department within a few days to ask approval for Lieutenant Lawrence W. Curtin and Ensign Stephen V. Edwards to act as his pilot and radio operator on the proposed land flight. His decision to abandon his projected trans-Atlantic flight was precipitated by navy department orders cancelling permission of Lieutenant Curtin and Ensign Edwards to accompany him.

COMMON SENSE NEEDED BY FLIERS, SAYS HOOVER

Hot Springs, Ark., September 10.—(AP)—Overseas air flights need more common sense and cafeguards, but there should be no attempt to stife the spirit of youth or the pioneer work of development, Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover said in a statement upon his arrival here today to attend a conference of flood officials from Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Mr. Hoover expressed himself as being opposed to government regulation of long flights at the present time, which he termed would be "too flexible, and to oppose such flights would be to oppose progress."

The secretary said he favored rigid rules, under the supervision of some national body, such as the National Aeronautical association, for all hazardous aviation undertakings, but at the same time took the view that no responsibilities in these matters should be undertaken by the department of commerce.

"TANGO BIRD" BREAKS RECORDS FOR FLIGHT

Paris, September 10.—(AP)—"Tango Bird," one of France's entries for the trans-Atlantic flights, achieved a record-breaking flight today from Paris to Marseilles and back. The attempt, however, although eminently successful, marked the disappearance of another prospective contestant in the Paris-to-New York air race.

"The weather is too miserable," Lieutenant Paul Tarascon, who with Laulhe piloted the plane, said upon returning to Le Bourget. "I would not think of trying a Paris-to-New York flight under these conditions."

The "Tango Bird" averaged 110 miles an hour, but, notwithstanding its satisfactory performance, Tarascon said: "It is too late to cross the ocean now. The American navy is quite right in prohibiting its officers to make the flight. Rene Fonck should bow to the official decision, and I hope he does."

Dogs, Cats, Birds Facing Trial Tuesday as Nuisance

:: PETLAND INMATES ODOROUS, NEIGHBORS SAY ::

Has the alleged nuisance created by the many pet animals and birds at the Pet Shop on the corner of Peachtree and West Peachtree streets been done away with satisfactorily, or must the police court order of abatement be enforced?

The answer to this question will be decided at 4:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon by Recorder Murphey M. Holloway in hearing a petition filed by J. C. Yancey, proprietor of the Pet Shop, in which Yancey claims that the order of the court to abate the nuisance has been complied with.

The Pet Shop, housing many valuable dogs, monkeys, parrots, rabbits, cats, gold fish and other pets, was held to be a nuisance in an order handed down by Judge Holloway some time ago. The shop was allowed 15 days before the order was to have been enforced, and this time has now expired, it was said.

On Saturday, the Pet Shop, through its attorneys, Aldine and Hewitt Chambers, filed a paper with Recorder Holloway asking the right to show that the nuisance judged to exist has been cured and that action on the court order is not necessary. Judge Holloway held up execution of the original abatement order until Tuesday afternoon in view of the move of the Pet Shop to show compliance with the court order.

The complaint against the Pet Shop was filed about August 19 by occupants of the premises above and near to the Pet Shop, the petition asking that it be adjudged a nuisance on the ground that intense and nauseating odors emanated from the shop early in the morning, and that it was necessary to raise the windows to rid the offices above and near by of the odors. The petition also cited that roaches, fleas and other vermin infested the place and spread to nearby offices, and that the Pet Shop permitted refuse from the kennels to remain in the basement overlong.

CHILD PLAYMATE OF TIN SOLDIER DIES FROM CRASH

Chicago, September 10.—(AP)—The long-ago companion of the "little toy dog" and the little tin soldier "whose musket moulds in his hands," immortalized by Eugene Field, will be buried tomorrow following his death last night.

Burns suffered last month in an automobile accident by Frederick Skiff Field, 44, son of the poet, caused his death. Burial will be at Tomahawk, Wis., where he died. Frederick Field was separated from his wife and two children. He is survived by his mother and two brothers and two sisters.

Frederick was a particular favorite child of the poet.

SHARE OF STOCK HELD SINCE 1864 RETURNS $94,000

Yonkers, N. Y., September 10.—(AP) Not to be outdone by Chauncey M. Depew, who found recently that $100 he put in a savings bank had become $1,100 in 66 years, John E. Andrus, millionaire straphanger, who rides to business in the subway, gives another illustration of thrift. He bought a share of sewing machine stock in 1864 and just "let it stay put." It has brought him $94,000 in dividends.

MOSQUITO SPRAYS BY PLANE PROVES DEATH TO PESTS

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—The mosquito dusting demonstration at Bamberg, S. C. September 8, was successful and proves that such infested areas can be cleared from the air, Dr. L. L. Williams, Jr., public health service, has wired Admiral Moffatt, naval air chief. Marine aviators under Captain Harold C. Major had sprayed impounded areas with Paris green and powdered soap stone as an indication that precautions against malaria can be facilitated by airplanes.

BIRMINGHAM POLICE SEEKING FLOGGERS

Birmingham, Ala., September 10.—(AP)—Police today were searching for five men who last night are alleged to have raided the home of Matthew Drew, a negro, who recently was subpoenaed by the county grand jury investigating masked floggings in Jefferson county.

Several shots were fired during the raid, police said, and John Stein, another negro who resided across the street from Drews' home, was seriously wounded by a stray bullet.

Police were told that Drew and his wife complained to County Solicitor Davis several weeks ago about visits by masked men to their home. They were charged, the negro said, with bootlegging.

Summons to appear before the grand jury is believed to have provoked the raid, officers said.

Warrants have been sworn out for the men in the raiding party.

Meanwhile, Solicitor Jim Davis issued a subpoenae for Marshall B. Lewis, editor and publisher of the "American Standard," a Birmingham publication, ordering him to appear before the grand jury to explain editorial attacks against Solicitor Davis. The American Standard is said to be a Ku Klux Klan publication.

The grand jury will reconvene Tuesday, at which time the work of investigating recent floggings in Jefferson county will continue.

Attorney General McCall, of Alabama, aided by Assistant Attorney General Haynes, is aiding in the investigation.

Drew is held under $500 bond charged with assault with intent to murder. He is alleged to have shot one of the members of the raiding party.

Authorities are investigating the story of three men, one of them said to have been suffering from a bullet wound, who visited the solicitor's office today and declared that they, as representatives of an investment company, had visited the Drew home yesterday in an effort to collect a small debt. No arrests have been made.

Soprano Again Heads Program At Lakewood

Miss Jesse Reese, lyric soprano and widely known as the "Dixie Songbird," and the 122d infantry band, Georgia national guard, will be features this afternoon at a concert to begin at 3 o'clock at Lakewood park.

A pretentious and varied program aimed to please the most fastidious music lover has been prepared, according to announcements Saturday.

Among the numbers will be popular selections and classical music for the more trained members of the audience. Atlanta music lovers have made the grandstand at the park a popular rendezvous since the musical programs were first inaugurated.

Out of a large number of contestants who tripped the light fantastic on the floors of the Lakewood dance pavilion Saturday night, Red McBride and Miss Ruth Henderson, talented dance couple, were given the judges' decision for being the best dancers of fox trots, and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Califf were proclaimed the best waltzers.

The two couples then competed against other winners of the nightly dances of the week in the dance elimination contest which is being staged by the Lakewood Amusement company, lessee of the dance hall.

The winners in the contest to determine the best dancers of the entire week were: Fox trot, Miss Mattie Boghus and George Upshaw, and waltz, Miss Silvia Levin and George Morris. The contestants will participate in the grand finale to be staged at the park on September 24 when the successful couple will be awarded the grand prize of the elimination contest.

KEWANEE

Steel + Rivets = Strength

Speaking of cracks and leaks and bulging seams, the Kewanee Steel (riveted) Firebox Boiler hasn't a speaking acquaintance with any of them. That's a big thing for you to remember when putting up a big building which will house many tenants.

You can't expect tenants to remain with you, nor can you expect your building to bring a good price if you want to sell it, if your heating boiler is subject to changes in the weather or is constantly getting out of whack. A few experiences of this kind are enough for any man unless he is a hog for punishment or has more money than a National bank.

If you skimp on your heating boiler and try to save a few dollars in first-cost, just think of the many days to come when your boiler quits work and your repairs cost more than the first-cost saving. And if this happens frequently, the boiler you saved money on, becomes a wild disastrous waste.

Skimp on the decorations if you want to—put in a cheaper grade of wood or spend less money on other things, but for the Land's sake buy the best boiler in the world and it will cover a multitude of financial sins. An old building with a Kewanee Boiler is a darn sight more valuable than a new building with some other type.

The big things of the Universe —the lasting things—the strong things are built of Steel (riveted). That's the way to build a boiler which will endure as long as you and your building will—and that fact is proved by EXPERIENCE—the greatest teacher of all.

Complaints about Kewanee Steel (riveted) Firebox Boilers are as scarce as hair on a watermelon. Compliments come from the finest buildings in the land. There never was a boiler built that has the friends Kewanee has.

RIVERSIDE ANNOUNCES ADDITIONS TO FACULTY

Gainesville, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Announcement was made here today of a number of important additions to the teaching personnel of Riverside Military academy. Among the new instructors are:

Major A. Knox Starlings, formerly head of the mathematic department of the St. John's Manlius school of New York city, who comes to Riverside as assistant principal.

Major J. S. Counselman, who for the past few years has been supervising principal of the Tallahassee public schools. Major Counselman is a well-known southern athlete, having distinguished himself as a V. P. I. player several years ago.

Captain E. M. Mooney is the new physical director. He was for several years physical director and coach of the Albany, Ga., Y. M. C. A. basketball team.

Major P. M. Thrasher, formerly commandant of Porter Military academy, Charleston, comes to Riverside as assistant commandant.

Lewis D. Lasting, of Portsmouth, Va., is the new head of Riverside's Spanish department.

Captain Dean H. Russell, of Blackstone, Va., is the new history instructor and tactical officer.

Riverside has a distinguished military record, having been designated by the U. S. war department as an honor school for five consecutive years.

BOLIVIA MINISTER REFUTES SOVIET FORGERY CHARGE

La Paz, Bolivia, September 10.—(AP)—Foreign Minister Thomas Manuel Elio, in reply to soviet charges of forgery, asserted today that there was no doubt of the authenticity of the documents recently submitted to the Bolivian parliament as proof of a communist revolutionary plot in this country.

The senate last night gave the government a unanimous vote of confidence on the question. The foreign minister, speaking before the vote, said the government was well able to take care of the country's problems and could not consent to Soviet Russian tutelage.

150th Anniversary Of Brandywine Is Celebrated

Chadd's Ford, Pa., September 10.—(AP)—Representatives of three nations, Great Britain, France and the United States and of two states, Delaware and Pennsylvania, today joined in observance of the 150th anniversary of the Battle of Brandywine, and upon the site of that memorable contest September 11, 1777, placed wreaths in memory of the soldiers who fell in battle.

Great crowds lined the field and just as the wreaths had been placed the silvery outlines of the dirigible Los Angeles, and the army blimp, TC-5 appeared through the clouds and dipped in salute. Each ship circled the field several times. Prior to their arrival airplanes from the 103d air squadron, Pennsylvania national guard, flew over the battle field.

On the wreath of immortelles, placed to the memory of the British and American soldiers by Colonel R. Pope-Hennessey, military attache of the British embassy at Washington, was the inscription: "From the British ambassador and the staff of the British embassy at Washington as a tribute to the memory of the officers and men of the British and American armies, who gave up their lives for their countries at the Battle of the Brandywine."

Major Georges Thenault, aviation attache of the French embassy, placed a wreath of laurel in tribute to the American soldiers; Governor Fisher, of Pennsylvania, placed a similar wreath to the memory of General LaFayette, who was wounded in the battle, and Major General William G. Price, of the Pennsylvania national guard, dedicated a wreath to the British soldiery. During these exercises a band played "The Star Spangled Banner," "God Save the King," and the "Marseillaise."

Speakers included Governor Fisher, of Pennsylvania; former Governor Sproul and the Rev. Dr. Phillip Cook, Episcopal bishop of Delaware. Bishop Cook declared the field could not be dedicated for it was consecrated by the blood of the men who fell to establish freedom.

FOOD GROWS HAIR ON BALD HEADS

Chicago.—Scientists have found that Baldness is brought on by the lack of necessary food elements that the human hair requires. "Foods found in Mother Earth grow, nourish and retain our hair," says P. A. Thomas, PhD., well known hair specialist, 167 American-Fore Bldg., Chicago. He further states that the hair roots always stay alive and that in 85 out of 100 cases where hair is falling out or baldness has set in, a growth of new hair can be had in a short time by following his simple directions. He will gladly explain his method without cost to those interested in restoring or saving their hair. Write him today.—(adv.)

Sunday To Visit Mission Where He Got Religion

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Chicago, September 10.—Thirty-two years ago a bum named Billy Sunday drifted into the Pacific Garden Mission to listen to the singing. The adventure ended up in him embracing religion and taking a fresh grip on life.

Much water has gone over the wheel since then. Billy Sunday, from that start, became a noted evangelist and has induced thousands of drifters to brace up and start anew along clean and decent lines.

Now Billy is to visit his old shrine. It looks much the same now as it did 32 years ago. Fifty years ago Colonel George Clark bought out the old Pacific Garden saloon, crossed out the word "saloon" and substituted "mission" and opened the doors to all-comers.

The famous mission is to celebrate the golden jubilee all next week. It has been polished and scoured and it will look like old times with Billy Sunday and Mel Trotter, no longer derelicts, but famous gospelers, taking leading parts. Billy is to preach Sunday afternoon and Trotter will deliver the jubilee sermon next Thursday. The little old wheezy organ is there and the congregation will sing the same old-fashioned songs and hymns, but there will be lively doings all week around 650 South State street. Even the hopeless bums and hoboes are brushing up for the golden jubilee.

Walter G. Taylor, and "Ma" Taylor still conduct the mission meetings. For 50 years they have not missed a night.

DIRIGIBLE DOCKED AT JERSEY AFTER TRIP TO GOTHAM

Lakehurst, N. J., September 10.—(AP)—The dirigible Los Angeles returned at 5:45 o'clock tonight from West Chester, Pa., where it participated in the celebration of the 150th anniversary of the battle of Brandywine. Earlier in the day the huge airship flew to New York and escorted members of the American Legion en route to Paris aboard the Leviathan 30 miles to sea. Then it flew to West Chester.

The non-rigid ship J-3, which accompanied the Los Angeles over the steamer, returned and was taken into the hangar.

ALLEGED SLAYER SAID SURROUNDED IN PENN. FOREST

Wellsville, N. Y., September 10.—(United News.)—Reports reaching here from Middlebury, Pa., tonight said that Wilmot L. Wagner, of Rushford, sought for the murder of two state troopers at Caneadea Thursday, was surrounded in a wood, near there.

The hunt for Wagner extended along the Pennsylvania line today following reports he had been in Olean, where he left hurriedly. At that time, Wagner was said to have been driving an automobile. Wagner has been sought since Thursday afternoon when he was alleged to have shot and killed Robert Roy and Arnold Rasmussen, state troopers, who went to his home to arrest him.

GRANDMA PLANS TRANS-ATLANTIC FLIGHT WHEN 110

Portland, Maine, September 10.—(AP)—Booked for a flight to California on her one hundred and fifth birthday, four years hence, and with visions of a trans-Atlantic trip by airplane when she is 110, Mrs. Amatia Bennett left here today for a 300-mile automobile ride to her home in Chicopee Falls, Mass.

"Grandma" was accompanied by Charles W. Bradley, 99, on a 100-mile flight from Boston yesterday as an incident of her 101st birthday celebration.

Tech Professor Weds in Historic Boston Church

Boston, Mass., September 10.—(Special.)—The "Old North Church" where the lanterns which signalled Paul Revere on his midnight ride were hung, was the scene of a notable wedding today when Miss Ruth Cameron Andrew, of Boston, was married to Robert Charles Dean, of Collierville, Tenn., who goes to Atlanta next week to assume his new duties as an instructor in the school of architecture at Georgia Tech.

Miss Andrew is the niece of Richard Andrew, the artist who painted the "Decoration of the 104th Regiment," which is in the hall of fame at the state house. She is a graduate of the Pratt institute of Brooklyn and a student of architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Mr. Dean recently accepted an offer made by Dr. M. L. Brittain, president of Georgia Tech, of Atlanta, to teach junior architecture at the Georgia School of Technology, and goes to Atlanta with the highest of recommendations. He is a graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he received the master's degree and also won the fellowship tour for 1927 in Europe. He is also a graduate of the Harvard Architectural school.

The bride was gowned in ivory satin and old lace, and was attended by her sister, Miss Helen F. Andrew, and her cousin, Miss Edwinna G. Andrew. They wore period gowns, one in peach and the other in turquoise. Mr. Dean was attended by James R. Killian, best man. Rev. R. L. Lynch performed the ceremony.

After a luncheon and reception in the rooms of the church, Mr. and Mrs. Dean left for Atlanta, Ga., where they will make their home.

Seldom are wedding ceremonies performed in the Old North church, and to have one's marriage solemnized in that historical building the bride or the groom must be a direct ascendant of a veteran of the Revolutionary war. This notable wedding of today is but the third performed within the church in the past score of years. Hundreds of thousands of tourists visit the church each summer and not a few of the out-of-town visitors were there during the ceremony today.

RUSSELL SCOTT'S INSANITY TRIAL AGAIN DELAYED

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution.)

Chicago, September 10.—Another continuance of the retrial of the insanity hearing of Russell Scott, who has been dodging the hangman's noose for three years or more, is expected to be granted Monday when his case is called before Chief Justice William V. Brothers in the criminal court.

Attorney William Scott Stewart, who saved Scott from the noose on the eve of his execution by having him judged insane, appeared before Judge Brothers today and said that he is not prepared to proceed on Monday.

Assistant State's Attorney Charles Mueller, who is to have charge of the fight to find Scott sane so that he may be hanged, also announced that he would be occupied with another court hearing. Judge Brothers is expected to assign the case to another judge for hearing later in the month.

CHINESE FESTIVAL IN GOTHAM HONORS EMPEROR'S NAME

New York, September 10.—In a corner of New York, the city of ceaseless and bewildering change, whose aspect alters and stretches and becomes unrecognizable almost from one year to the next, 3,000 Chinese began the changeless festival of the Emperor Shun Ai, who died 3,250 years ago.

The 3,000 are representatives of 30,000 descendants of the emperor in this country who have gathered in Chinatown for the 15-day celebration five days of which will be set aside for the selection of the new supreme president. The other ten will be devoted to banqueting.

Stories of Mr. Scoodledo

:: COMPILED FROM MAGAZINE SERIES OF MRS. HALL ::

By Atlanta Woman Appear

It might be well to list him among "our latest and most distinguished arrivals"—Mr. Scoodledo, that queer creature with the big flat tail that "goes flip-flop-flump all the time, even when he's asleep."

Mr. Scoodledo is in our midst, so to speak, and he's brought along with him a host of fantastic companions that will make youthful eyes grow big and round and bring a laugh to little red lips all set for smiling.

The gentleman with the unusual name and all his playmates live in the covers of a book written by an Atlanta woman, Mrs. Minerva Hall, of 77 Thirteenth street, N. E., the wife of Max Hall, and the volume has just made its apearance on the local literary market.

It's composed of a series of stories which first made their appearance in print in John Martin's magazine in 1914. They were stories adapted from the original bits of imaginary animal legend related by Mrs. Hall to her children, so that when she submitted them for publication they were readily accepted and gained a wide vogue among childish readers.

In 1924 the stories were republished by the magazine in response to popular demand, and now Dodd, Mead & Co. has put them into book form and given them national circulation. They are attractively illustrated with pen-and-ink sketches by Drucklich.

The characters that roam through their typographical mazes are queer creatures that invariably have some every-day human characteristic that makes them particularly appealing. Though the moral involved in their action is never stressed, it may be a satisfaction to parents to know that it's there.

Mr. Scoodledo, chief of the dramatis personnae of the juvenile opus, is a sort of chivalric Robin Hood of the Land of Imagination, and the youngster who follows his swashbuckling and thoroughly charming course through the stories is in for many a merry literary journey.

The Scoodledo stories are clever, bright, interesting—a treat for young minds and an efficient first aid to the bedside raconteur.

Dr. Soule Announces Establishment of New Department at College

Athens, Ga., September 10.—(AP)—A new department to be known as the department of fine and applied arts, has been established at the Georgia College of agriculture, President Andrew M. Soule has announced. Students will be instructed in drawing, painting, clay work, designing and art work. Miss Mildred Ledford, a graduate of Pratt institute, will head the department.

President Soule, in giving the announcement, reviewed the work of the College of agriculture during the summer.

During the nine weeks that Camp Wilkins was open, 2,529 vocational boys and girls and farm women were in attendance, President Soule said. Seventy-seven different groups of farmers, coming distances as long as 125 miles from Athens, visited the college to inspect the experimental projects and farms. The first Georgia national egg laying contest was visited during the summer by groups and individuals not only from all parts of Georgia but from other states.

In discussing his plans for the fall, President Soule expressed pleasure in the action of the general assembly and governor in appropriating funds necessary to carry on the work of education in Georgia. In particular, President Soule said he thought the legislature in offsetting the Smith-Lever appropriation in full, avoided bringing Georgia under disciplinary measures meted out to some states for failure to offset federal funds.

Dr. Soule made an appeal in behalf of "worthy boys and girls who are anxious to enter college this fall, but who cannot without the aid of a scholarship."

Avondale Estates Reports Sales of Four Residences

Above is shown 13 Berkeley road, in Avondale Estates, which has been sold to B. Dixon, prominent local architect and builder. This is one of four residences which have been disposed of within the last few days. The management of Avondale reports unusual activity in sales of homes, and in general interest in real estate conditions.

DECATUR LIBRARY OPEN AFTERNOONS, IT IS ANNOUNCED

Decatur, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The Decatur library will be open from 3 to 5 p. m. daily except Sunday until further notice, beginning Monday, it is announced.

The annual subscription price has been reduced from $1.50 to $1.00 and the time limit on all subscriptions paid during the month of August will be extended an additional half year to conform with this reduction.

New shelves are being erected to take care of additional books. It is announced that the number of books circulated during the month of August was the greatest in the history of the library.

BERRY SCHOOLS HAVE RECORD ATTENDANCE

Rome, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Formal opening exercises were held today at the Berry schools. The opening addresses were delivered by H. G. Hamrick, superintednent of the Mount Berry school for boys and M. G. Keowan, alumni trustee of the schools. They welcomed the new students into the Berry family and paid a glowing tribute to Miss Martha Berry, who has made it possible for thousands of country boys and girls to obtain an education by working their way through the schools.

The schools have the largest registration in the history of the institution with several hundred on the waiting list.

Stewart Defends Pro Evangelism In U. S. Churches

Kansas City, September 10.—(AP)—Protestants in the United States are turning to the great union meeting evangelistic program, the Rev. Charles Stewart, of Winona Lake, Ind., secretary of the Inter-Denominational Evangelistic association, declared in a statement here today.

"Evangelism has won too great favor with the masses to be suddenly discarded," he asserted in commenting on reports from New York that the Protestant evangelical churches, through the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, are conducting a fight on highly paid professional evangelists.

"Visitation evangelism," which is sponsored by churchmen opposed to professional evangelists, has not produced results, Mr. Stewart said. He explained that visitation evangelism is a personal appeal based on a survey of Protestant families in a community by a special committee.

"The division of opinion of ministers on the subject of modernism has been one of the chief causes for the neglect of evangelism," he said. "With the great union meeting movement at low tide since the world war there has been a rise in crime, also a falling off in church membership. Now there is a turning to the great union meeting program."

'Forward Atlanta' Campaign Wins Attention of National Figures of Railroad World

Transportation Leaders in All Parts of Country Comment on Portfolios of Municipal Advertising

Atlanta's national advertising campaign has the interest and approval of many prominent railroad executives in all parts of the country. This is attested by numerous letters received during the past week at the chamber of commerce headquarters from railroad men in acknowldgment of "Forward Atlanta" portfolios mailed recently to outstanding American business men.

The following are remarks quoted from a small portion of the answers received:

"It is a splendid tribute to the quality of leadership that makes Atlanta the great city it is. The influence of this movement has been, and no doubt will continue to be, an important force in the development of the south."—J. B. Hill, president Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis railway, Nashville, Tenn.

"Thanks for your letter of August 16 with attached book on Atlanta, which I shall have pleasure in reading."—E. N. Brown, chairman of the board, St. Louis-San Francisco Railway company, 120 Broadway, New York city.

"'The Success Story of a City' I have read with interest and appreciation. Thanking you and with best wishes for the further success of your movement, I am Hale Holden," president Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad company, 547 West Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

"Thank you for the very beautiful book entitled 'Forward Atlanta,' received with your favor of the 16th instant. I am very glad to receive a copy." W. R. Cole, president Louisville & Nashville Railroad company, Louisville, Ky.

"It is both interesting and inspiring. The Central of Georgia counts itself fortunate in having in its territory a city that sets such a splendid example of civic spirit and progress."—J. J. Pelley, president Central of Georgia Railway company, Savannah, Ga.

"The book has been gotten out in a most attractive manner, and I am sure it portrays the spirit that is behind the 'Forward Atlanta' movement, the successful result of which, I am certain, is assured."—Robert E. M. Cowie, president American Railway Express company, 65 Broadway, New York city.

"You certainly have made a fine publication, but you had a splendid subject to talk about. I have long been an admirer of Atlanta and know a little about it, although not as much as I should like to know."—Howard Elliott, chairman of the board, Northern Pacific Railway company, 34 Nassau street, New York city.

Advertising Effectiveness.

"The effectiveness of your advertising campaign I believe fully justifies the carrying on of this movement."—E. E. Loomis, president Lehigh Valley Railroad company, 143 Liberty street, New York city.

"Permit me to congratulate you on this most timely publication; it is thorough in every respect and should be productive of far-reaching results."—Robert L. Nutt, vice president Seaboard Air Line Railway company, 24 Broad street, New York city.

"Please accept my thanks for your kindness in sending me this instructive and interesting booklet."—J. E. Taussig, president Wabash Railway company, Railway Exchange building, St. Louis, Mo.

"It is a fine piece of work, is well gotten up, and very completely covers the purpose for which it is intended."—J. E. Gorman, president the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway company, La Salle street Station, Chicago, Ill.

"The brochure, which accompanied your letter of August 16, is everything a work of its character ought to be and a little more. It really is the most attractive and interesting presentation I have seen in a long time. It is only natural, however, that the same judgment which produces the advantages Atlanta is increasingly enjoying should be exemplified in that fashion, too. I wish you all sorts of continued success in the 'Forward Atlanta' movement, and am sure you will have it."—L. A. Downs, president Illinois Central System, Chicago, Ill.

Interesting Recital.

"This is a most interesting recital of Atlanta's success in carrying forward a great movement, initiated by your chamber of commerce, for the progress of your city. You have my heartiest congratulations and best wishes for the Atlanta of the future."—W. W. Atterbury, president the Pennsylvania Railroad company, Broad street station, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

"I appreciate very much your having sent me this attractive and interesting book portraying the development of your great city. Atlanta is to be congratulated on its splendid location and wealth of facilities and resources, which have greatly aided in making this country prosperous."—J. M. Davis, president Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad company, 90 West street, New York city.

"It is a magnificent piece of work and should convey to the world a greater opinion of Atlanta's accomplishments."—E. F. Carry, president the Pullman company, Chicago, Ill.

"I was greatly interested in reading the story and appreciate your having it sent to me."—J. J. Bernet, president Erie Railroad company, 50 Church street, New York city.

"This publication very impressively portrays the progressiveness and possibilities of the Atlanta community, and I congratulate you upon the effectiveness of your efforts."—L. W. Baldwin, president Missouri Pacific Lines, St. Louis, Mo.

"I found it of decided interest. I am grateful to you for sending it to me."—Fred W. Sargent, president Chicago & North Western Railway company, Chicago, Ill.

$75,000 PAST DUE OIL INSPECTION FEES COLLECTED

Approximately $75,000 in past due oil inspection fees have been collected by the state department of agriculture and complete figures to be compiled Monday will show nearly $100,000 collected from this source, according to Eugene Talmadge, commissioner of agriculture.

The oil inspection bureau of the state department of agriculture was abolished in a bill passed by the legislature recently and this work placed under the supervision of the state comptroller. Commissioner Talmadge is now collecting all past due fees due the bureau. The work of inspection will begin January 1 in the office of the comptroller. The change in the law became effective September 1, but no appropriation to pay the administration expenses will be available until January 1, 1928.

AYCOCK CASE NOT HEARD AT JESUP

Jesup, Ga., September 10.—(AP) W. B. Aycock, in jail at Waycross charged with the murder of Ernest Dyal near Jesup several weeks ago, was not given a preliminary hearing here today. It had been announced that such a hearing would take place but counsel for the defendant have decided not to ask for it at this time. Aycock is still in jail at Waycross.

The attorneys have given no intimation as to when they will seek a preliminary hearing.

Dyal was killed by Aycock while returning to this home from Brunswick, with his bride of three months and J. W. Kemp, special agent of the Atlantic Coast Line railroad. Kemp, who was accompanying Aycock when the slaying occurred, was also arrested but was subsequently exonerated.

Mrs. Dyal, in a statement issued following the killing, declared her husband was unarmed, while Aycock declared he fired when Dyal attempted to pull a gun.

Aycock and Kemp were removed from the jail here the night after the shooting and Aycock has since been confined in the Waycross jail.

TUCK TO SUCCEED JUDGE BRADWELL ON ATHENS COURT

Athens, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Judge Henry C. Social Circle Block Threatened by Fire; Warehouse Damaged

Social Circle, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Fire of an unknown origin broke out in a warehouse back of stores on the west of Main street late Friday afternoon. Besides the warehouse a large barn and a blacksmith shop were soon ablaze, a near-by residence caught and the entire block of stores was threatened.

Lester Phillips, superintendent of the local cotton mills, took charge of the volunteer fire forces, water from six fire hose being used. A call was sent to Monroe for help and they sent a fire truck, but before it arrived the fire was under control.

The amount of damage is not known.

The E. L. Almand Hardware company had the warehouse full of supplies and the barn was the property of Mrs. E. L. Newton.

Funeral Is Held In Madison County For Accident Victim

Athens, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Funeral services for William Brown, 18, who died here Thursday from injuries received in an automobile wreck Tuesday night, were conducted from a Madison county Baptist church Friday afternoon. Mr. Brown was riding in an automobile in Madison county Tuesday night when it struck a steel bridge near Ila. He was brought to a local hospital for treatment.

He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Brideour, of Madison county.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

VOL. LX., No. 89. ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 11, 1927.

50,000 Children Awaiting School Call on Monday

Registrations Show Approximately 3,000 More Pupils Than at Same Time Last Year.

CROWDED CLASSES LAID TO FUND LACK

Children Urged To Report Promptly at 8:30 To Be Assigned to New Schools.

Zero hour for approximately 50,000 Atlanta youngsters, approximately 3,000 more than last year, dawns at 8:30 o'clock Monday morning.

And the tramp of the Gate City's army of little and big students will be begun. The new school year of 1927-28 will be officially launched.

While hundreds will regret that vacation time is over, an unofficial poll conducted mainly through rumors emanating from school department headquarters showed an overwhelming vote in favor of renewing school days.

Bathing pools are closed and have been since Labor day. Sun-tanned shoulders have had a week to reach normalcy. The rollicking and carefree life has been enjoyed to the fullest, but now the grind of "getting an education" is about to begin again.

Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools, and his corps of assistants, Saturday announced that the machinery of education has been thoroughly oiled and that, despite the handicaps under which the system must operate because of insufficient funds, all preparations have been completed and details of consolidation worked out.

Failure of City.

In a statement issued Saturday, Mr. Sutton cautioned patrons of the system affected by the consolidation scheme, inaugurated as an economy program, to "remember that it is not the fault of the administration, but the failure of the city to provide sufficient funds."

Registration will be approximately 3,000 more than it was on the opening day last year, according to M. E. Coleman, head of the department of statistics.

There will be about 46,000 white elementary school students as against 44,000 of last season. Even with the added 2,000 scholars, there will be 40 less teachers in that division than there were last year because of the economy program, which forced many consolidations.

In spite of a large increase in registration for junior and senior high schools, there will be 30 less teachers this year, according to estimates of the department.

1,500 Registrations.

A total of 1,500 were registered last week, Mr. Coleman announced, and estimated that at least half the number were new students, while the remaining were transfers.

Mr. Sutton issued the following statement relative to the opening:

"All children should report to schools Monday morning at 8:30 o'clock. The stage is set and all preliminary work of the teachers, principals, supervisors and superintendents has been completed. School will remain in session Monday as long as is necessary for organization.

"Beginning Tuesday, parents may expect their children to remain at school all day. All children should report to the school to which they have been ticketed or transferred. The school to which the child was last assigned should be the school which the child should report. If there are to be adjustments, these must come later.

Walker Street Registration.

"Citizens who have failed to register their children for school must register through the central office, 165 Walker street. The office has been open the entire summer and doubtless will be crowded Monday. If patrons become impatient, they must remember that it is not the fault of the administration, but their own that tickets were not gotten sooner.

"Assignments will be made for late comers in the school where there is sufficient room. We cannot guarantee that a child registering late will be placed in the school nearest his home. This will be done wherever possible.

POWER COMPANY, CITY DEADLOCKED ON VIADUCT PLAN

Failure To Reach Agreement With Officials Over Franchise Proviso Causes Impasse.

Progress in adjustment of differences between the Georgia Power company and the bridge committee of city council concerning terms under which the company will contribute $400,000 to construction of the Pryor street and Central avenue was at a standstill Saturday following failure of the committee Friday to reach an agreement on any of the proposals which were considered.

Alderman William B. Hartsfield, chairman of the bridge committee, will be forced to wait return to the city Monday of Chief of Construction William Hansell to ascertain the feasibility and practicability of erecting the bridges without a donation from the company. This proposition was all but exploded when it was reached at a meeting of the committee Friday afternoon, when City Attorney James L. Mayson declared a fund to pay consequential damages must be preserved.

Frank H. Neely, chairman of the Atlanta bond commission, stated that although the bond body has nothing to do with arrangements between the city and the company, he believed construction of the bridges would be impossible without a contribution of at least $400,000 to supplement the $1,000,000 bond issue fund from the city, the $500,000 from the county and the $430,000 from the railroads.

"I do insist that the delay in securing the donation is retarding progress and that it is necessary to completion of the projects," Mr. Neely said.

Mayor I. N. Ragsdale Saturday expressed disapproval of the plan to give the power company what is said to be a long term traction franchise without competition throughout the city with a stipulation that the city could abrogate the agreement on repayment of $400,000 donation. It was this compromise plan of the company, which the bridge committee failed to act on Friday afternoon.

Mr. Hartsfield is author of the proposal to construct the projects without any financial assistance from the company with the understanding that the company not use the bridges for street car service. He will confer with Mr. Hansell with a view of ascertaining whether the city would be in a financial position to make the improvement without the donation from the company.

Another proposal, advanced at the meeting, and which will be offered to Preston S. Arkwright, president of the power concern, when he returns to the city, provided that the company make the donation for which it would receive an uncontested perpetual traction service franchise over the new structures.

Members of the bond commisison failed to act on the proposal of the company to make the donation with the proviso of a traction service franchise throughout the city, because it felt it had no right to consider anything looking towards a traction contract between the city and the company, according to files of the commission.

Mayor's Disapproval.

The expression from Mr. Ragsdale came in the form of telegraphic advices to Mayor Pro Tem., W. Guy Dobbs, acting mayor while the mayor is on a tour of the east. Mr. Dobbs telegraphed the mayor the company's compromise measure, and asked his reaction on the instance of Mr. Hartsfield.

A move looking towards a compromise between the city and the Connally Realty company and the Atlanta & Lowry National bank, concerning the points at which the Alabama street approach shall begin loomed Saturday when the realty concern addressed a letter to all members of the bond commission and city council asking an easement of four feet in sidewalk areas in the event the approach is begun at Whitehall street and run on a level to the top of the Pryor street project.

The four feet would provide ample room for ingress and egress to base-

FAMOUS ARTISTS TO EXHIBIT HERE

High Museum of Art To Display Collection of 200 Celebrated Pieces During October.

An exhibit numbering 200 pieces from the chisel and brush of America's foremost artists will be displayed here for the first time outside New York city at the High Museum of Art during October.

The collection assembled by the Associated Dealers in American Paintings while on display at the Anderson galleries in New York was regarded as the highlight of last year's season there, according to J. Carroll Payne, president of the Atlanta Art association.

Mr. Payne stated that officials of the art association began negotiations with the art dealers' organization regarding the exhibition early in the summer and that J. J. Haverty, vice president of the art association, had conferred with representatives of the associated dealers in New York, with the result that a schedule was specially arranged to make Atlanta the first point of the exhibition's itinerary. Other cities which will have the exhibition after it leaves Atlanta are Birmingham, Dallas, New Orleans, Memphis, St. Louis and Louisville.

Sixty Paintings in Exhibit.

The exhibition, which will be open to the public on October 2, will comprise 60 paintings, 100 water colors and etchings and 40 pieces of sculpture, all by the greatest American artists of the past 50 years. Seventy-five per cent of the work will be that of living artists, a number of whom will be present during the exhibition. The remaining 25 per cent of the objects of art will be famous examples by such masters as John S. Sargent, James McN. Whistler, Mary Cassatt, Winslow Homer, Homer D. Martin, Abbott Thayer, George Bellows and others. Almost without exception, the paintings and sculpture have never before been shown outside of New York and many have never been shown to the public at all.

Speaking of the art association's plans for this exhibition, Mr. Payne said: "We feel that Atlanta is very fortunate in obtaining this fine exhibit of American art. The committee regards it as the most important showing ever held in the High museum, inasmuch as it forms a complete retrospective and current survey of American art from 1870 onward. We feel that as an opening for our 1927-28 art season it should have a distinct influence on the growth of art appreciation in Atlanta."

The exhibit will be privately viewed by members of the art association on October 1 and will be open to the public from October 2 to 30.

26 SPIES AWAIT SOVIET COURTS

Espionage in Behalf of Britain Charged to Group Held in Leningrad for Sentence.

Leningrad, Russia, September 10.—(AP)—Court decision is expected next Wednesday in the case of 26 alleged spies, charged with espionage in behalf of the British intelligence service.

The group is headed by Albert Goyer, said to have been an international spy since 1916. It includes Professor Nikitin, employed in the chemical industry, several former merchants, officers in the army, navy, employees of civil institutions, a 70-year-old woman accused of giving refuge to spies arriving from abroad and an 18-year-old dancer, Doriomedova.

Members of the organization are alleged to have confessed to sending through officials of the Finnish consulate in Leningrad data on the soviet navy, including plans of battleships and submarines, as well as mobilization arrangements and information on soviet industries and economics.

Letters written in invisible ink, it is alleged, were delivered to a representative in Finland of the British intelligence service

McCray Expected To Tell of Bribe At Jackson Trial

DR. RUFUS WEAVER TO LEAVE MERCER UPON OCTOBER 1

President Macon University To Take Position With Educational Board of Baptists.

Macon, Ga., September 10.—(AP)—Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, for nine years president of Mercer university, announced here this afternoon that he had decided to accept the position as secretary of the education board of the Southern Baptist convention. He says he will leave Macon on October 1 to go to Birmingham, headquarters for the board.

The announcement of Dr. Weaver came after several meetings of the board of trustees of Mercer university, at which he presented his resignation, and a meeting of the education board in Birmingham this week.

Dr. Weaver was elected secretary of the board in July and no announcement of his decision was made until a meeting of the board of trustees of Mercer on August 17, when he presented his resignation as president of the university.

By a unanimous vote the board asked Dr. Weaver to reconsider and arranged a meeting for the following morning, when he resubmitted his resignation. Again the trustees refused to accept it and a committee was appointed to negotiate with the education board to obtain Dr. Weaver's release from "moral obligations."

United States Senator Walter F. George, Walter P. Binns and A. B. Conger were the members of the committee that asked that Dr. Weaver be released by the education board so that he could continue his work at Mercer.

On his return to Macon Dr. Weaver announced that he will again submit his resignation to the trustees on September 23, and that it will be irrevocable.

President Since 1918.

Dr. Weaver came to Mercer as president in the fall of 1918 and under his administration the university has grown from an enrollment of approximately 300 to the last year's total of 1,127.

Since Dr. Weaver came to Mercer, 4,064 students have enrolled at the institution, almost as many as during the entire history of the university from its founding in 1833 to that time. Four hundred and forty-eight students have been trained for the ministry in the theological seminary since 1918. Since 1918, 786 degrees have been conferred on students. This is more degrees than were conferred during the entire history up to that time.

Dr. Weaver was educated in Wake Forest college, North Carolina; the Southern Baptist Theological seminary; Johns Hopkins university and the University of Cincinnati. He received honorary degrees from Baylor university, Wake Forest college and Bethel college.

He was for many years a Baptist minister and held pastorates in High Point, N. C.; Middletown, Ohio; Baltimore, Maryland; Cincinnati, Ohio, and Nashville, Tenn.

He is the author of numerous books.

$1 FINE IN GOTHAM COURT WORTH $150 LOAN HE COLLECTED

New York, September 10.—(AP)—Joseph Minkel probably will concede that it was worth it. In court for parking his car in forbidden territory he explained that he saw another motorist who owed him $150, left his car, ran after the debtor, and got the money. "Then you won't miss a $1 fine," said Magistrate Bridges.

Former Governor of Indiana, Just Released From Atlanta Pen, To Be State Witness.

PROBE BY JURORS NOT YET FINISHED

Other Indictments May Be Added to Those of Governor Jackson and Mayor DuVall.

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Indianapolis, Ind., September 10.—Indiana may soon see one of its former governors take the witness stand in the criminal court as one of the chief prosecuting witnesses against its present governor. The name of Warrent T. McCray, former governor, who was released recently after serving a three-year term at the federal penitentiary in Atlanta for using the mails to defraud, appears on the back of the grand jury indictment against Governor Ed Jackson, as one of the principal witnesses for the state. McCray, it is understood, has asked not to be called before the Marion county grand jury, which, in its report Friday, charged Governor Jackson, George V. Coffin, republican city and county political boss, and Robert I. Marsh, former law partner of Jackson, with attempted bribery and conspiracy to commit a felony, but had sent word that he would be willing to testify as a witness in the case if the state deemed it nesessary.

If McCray is summoned as a witness, and it is reasonably assumed that he will be, he will be called on to give the intimate details of the alleged offer of Jackson to turn over to him $10,000 and assurances of immunity from conviction in the county courts if he would name James E. McDonald as prosecuting attorney instead of William H. Remy, who was appointed.

Admits Conference.

Jackson, in the one brief statement he has made in regard to the charges, admitted having held a conference with McCray but said nothing of the alleged $10,000 bribe offer. He said he had asked for the appointment of McDonald at the request of Bishop H. P. Fout, of the United Brethren church. It was the alleged $10,000 that formed the basis for the grand jury indictment. Jackson, Coffin and Marsh will be arraigned before Judge James A. Collins in criminal court October 3. Judge Collins said he would make no departure from the regular procedure followed in other criminal cases. The defendants at that time will enter pleas of guilty or not guilty and dates for their trials will be set.

Mayor John L. Duvall, who also was indicated, the charge being violation of the corrupt practices act, also may be arraigned at the same time. The mayor is scheduled to go on trial in criminal court Monday on similar charges, based on affidavits filed some time ago by the prosecuting attorney and his aids. In the meantime the grand jury will continue its investigation of alleged political corruption in the state.

William H. Remy, prosecuting attorney, said today it is likely that many more witnesses would be summoned to testify, and there are indications that additional indictments, naming other persons, may be returned.

Governor Is "Happy."

Asserting, without amplification, that he was "happier than he had been for some time," Governor Jackson was at his office at the statehouse at an early hour Saturday and remained there for the greater part of the day. He spent considerable time shaking hands and chatting with numerous persons, including state officials and employees and politicians who called to see him.

The governor would make no furth-

Pastor Reveals Nurse

:: WOMAN HELD FOLLOWING TWO DEATHS ::

Avowed Love for Him

Enid, Okla., September 10.—(AP)—Mary Atkinson, 26-year-old nurse, who is in the county jail while authorities are investigating the deaths of the wife and an 18-year-old daughter of the Rev. Charles Bailey, pastor of St. Matthew's Episcopal church here, had professed her love for the minister, he revealed today.

The gray-haired minister told newspapermen that Miss Atkinson frankly had told him she loved him, but said he did not reciprocate. Her ardent nature had proved a great embarrassment to him at times, he said.

Miss Atkinson followed the minister and his family here from Gainesville, Texas, four months ago and lived with the Baileys until recently when Bailey suggested her departure. At that time she threatened suicide. She was often moody and had a smoldering temper, Bailey said.

The nurse attended Mrs. Bailey, who died several weeks ago, and Mary Jane Bailey, 18, who died last Thursday while the minister was out of the city. A report on an analysis of the viscera of the girl is being awaited by county officials, who took Miss Atkinson into custody for questioning after a package bearing a poison label was found in her room. Three other Bailey children have recovered from an illness, which at first was diagnosed as ptomaine poisoning.

Bailey in discussing the illness of members of his family, declared "it does seem as if Mary Jane's death was by poison."

Bishop E. Cecil Seaman, of the Episcopal church of north Texas, arrived here today and after conferring with the minister expressed the belief that "there is not the slightest evidence to involve Dr. Bailey."

"I have complete confidence that Dr. Bailey will be cleared of every vestige of suspicion which may have been directed toward him."

On his return here from Colorado yesterday, the pastor was questioned by county officials but was not detained.

A death certificate attributing the death of Mary Jane to "poisoning of some kind" was filed today. Her funeral, which had been held up by lack of the certificate, will be held tomorrow from the church of which Dr. Bailey is pastor.

PAROLE PLEA MEETS DENIAL

Albert E. Sartain, who is serving 18 months in the Atlanta federal penitentiary, of which he was once warden, for acceptance of bribes from wealthy prisoners during his tenure of office. His application for parole was deferred, his papers being held incomplete. He must await the next meeting of the parole board.

BOARD TO SETTLE SCHOOL WAGE CUT

Approval of Five Projects Under $3,500,000 Also Faces Group at Tuesday Meeting.

Approval of five school projects, the first of the $3,500,000 allocation for school purposes in the $8,000,000 bond issue, and definite decision of the board of education as to whether or not it will adopt the recommendation of Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools, providing for placing into effect as of September 1 the wage scale increase and a blanket cut of 5 per cent after the new scale is made effective, are expected to be feaiurs of the September meeting of the board of education Tuesday afternoon.

The board last year set up a scale of salaries which would be effective September 1 of each year for a number of years. This increase was formally suspended by action of the board following a recommendation of the citizens' advisory committee, supervising school expenditures. Mr. Sutton's plan would permit the increase, and immediately following the increase, would clamp on the 5 per cent slash. It is argued that his plan would provide more funds for the instructional account than the old plan, which provided that the increase be suspended and that only those who have reached the maximum salary under the scale be cut.

The old plan would have raised only a few hundred dollars, but the latter one would increase the total to $40,000, according to estimates, and at the same time be more acceptable to the teachers, since it would preserve the salary scale and the slash would continue only about four months.

Plans and specifications for the new school buildings will be ready for the meeting Tuesday, R. R. Ritchie, assistant superintendent of schools in charge of business affairs, announced. They are an addition to Hoke Smith Junior High school and new structures for Capitol View, Ormewood, Davis and Stanton schools.

If the board accepts the plans and specifications Tuesday, bids can be asked immediately and bonds advertised for sale to cover cost of the projects. Contracts could be let within 30 days.

Construction work on school improvements, therefore, will be the first to get under way from bond funds. The board also will approve expenditures of the first $100,000 of a $300,000 contingent fund.

Mr. Sutton's proposal to place into effect the automatic salary scale increase for all employees of the system, and place on a 5 per cent blanket cut from now until January 1 was advanced as an economy move designed to permit employment of additional teachers to care for the phenomenal increase in school attendance.

The plan was suggested at a called meeting of the board last Tuesday, but action was deferred until the September session.

Other routine matters also will be considered.

PERSHING LEADING FRENCH INVASION

Vice President Dawes Among Those at Pier To Say Good-Bye as Leviathan Sails.

New York, September 10.—(AP)—The liner Leviathan, flagship of the "Second A. E. F.," was far out at sea tonight carrying the last contingent of the American Legion to the legion convention in Paris. Their sailing occasioned one of the most elaborate bon voyage demonstrations the harbor ever has seen.

In sharp contrast to the secret departure of the same vessel ten years ago when, with her sides a nightmare of camouflage, she carried thousands of the A. E. F. on a more serious mission to France, the Leviathan was dressed in her best today and steamed down the bay under an air escort that included the dirigible Los Angeles and a squadron of planes.

Dawes at Pier.

Vice President Dawes was at the pier, among crowds of relatives and friends of the legionnaires, and General Pershing was a passenger. As the liner entered the Narrows three national guard planes circled overhead and an army bomber threw a smoke screen about the big ship. The Los

INHERITANCE TAX REPEAL IS ASKED BY MANY STATES

Meet To Outline Levy Reduction Procedure for Legislature Conference Held in Washington.

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—Coincident with a meeting here today of delegates from many states anxious for repeal of the inheritance tax provision of the revenue law, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States issued a statement declaring that an insistent demand for revision of federal taxes was reaching headquarters of the chamber from all parts of the country.

The meeting of the state delegates was for the purpose of outlining methods of procedure for the forthcoming national conference of state legislatures and to draw up plans for petitioning congress to repeal the inheritance tax provision.

In addressing the gathering Lee Satterwhite, former speaker of the Texas house of representatives, declared the federal dominion now virtually extended over some branches of state governments and is "descending like a cloud, without even the poor pretext of a financial partnership" over others.

"Our immediate aim, therefore," he said, "should be the repeal of the federal estate tax. But in making that our first step, let us bear in mind that it is but the first step—that there are many other steps to follow in the long march back to readjustment, on a basis of sanity and justice between the federal and state governments."

The chamber of commerce statement was issued by Lewis E. Pierson, its president, coincident with a gathering here of the chamber's committee on federal taxation. He said it was clear from correspondence coming in that the problems of federal taxation, particularly the chamber's advocacy of a reduction in the corporation income tax rate was receiving more attention by business men everywhere than any other public question.

Mr. Pierson outlined the following

Hindu Seer To Be Held As Fugitive

Col. Ghadiali's Arrest Ordered When He Fails to Show at Pen for Term.

Arrest of Colonel Dinshah P. Ghadiali, Hindu metaphysician, of Malaga, N. J., and his delivery at the Atlanta federal penitentiary to begin serving a five-year term for violation of the Mann white slavery act, has been ordered by the attorney general, it was learned Saturday.

Commitment appears for Ghadiali have been sent by Louis H. Crawford, United States marshal at Atlanta, to the marshal at Trenton, N. J., following receipt of advices from the attorney general. Ghadiali was to have surrendered at midnight last Tuesday to Mr. Crawford, but has failed to put in appearance so far.

Ghadiali, who was born in India, was convicted in Portland, Ore., on white slavery charges, it being alleged that he transported a girl from Oregon to New Jersey. He was sentenced to five years and a fine of $5,000, but was at liberty under heavy bond pending the expiration of respites granted by the president. The second respite expired Tuesday night, and no further respite was allowed, it was stated.

U. S. WILL RUSH FRENCH TREATY

Immediate Opening of Negotiations To Offset Tariff Schedule Authorized by Washington.

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—New instructions authorizing immediate opening of negotiations with France for a commercial treaty have been sent by the state department to the embassy in Paris where negotiations will take place.

Under a tentative arrangement, the detailed negotiations were expected to begin soon after October 1, but because of the situation created by the application of new French tariff schedules, the state department has instructed the embassy to undertake the negotiations without delay.

Under Ruling Former Warden Must Wait Until Next Session of Board for Appeal.

RIEHL'S PLEA ALSO MEETS WITH DENIAL

Sentenced to 18 Months, Former Prison Chief Has Served More Than Six Months of Term.

Albert E. Sartain, former chief of the Atlanta federal penitentiary but now an inmate of the institution of which he once was warden, will be forced to wait until "the next meeting of the Atlanta parole board" for action on his petition for executive clemency, it was learned Saturday night.

Sartain was considered by the board, which adjourned Thursday night, but his papers were incomplete and action on his petition was deferred.

Lawrence "Heinie" Riehl, of Cleveland, former neighbor of the warden, and who was sentenced to serve a year-and-a-day, six months less than Sartain, following conviction on charges of conspiracy to "shake down" prisoners in what was termed a wholesaling scheme to sell "soft jobs" while the warden was in charge, has been turned down, according to information.

Riehl and Sartain were indicted joinly with former Deputy Warden Looney J. Fletcher. They were convicted and Fletcher was freed. Fletcher later was indicted with former Catholic Chaplain Father Thomas P. Hayden, and a mistrial resulted.

Sensational charges were launched by the federal government in connection with a sweeping probe conducted by the department of justice. George Remus, Cincinnati bootlegging, and his wife, Mrs. George Remus, now estranged; Fred Haar, Willie Haar, Richard Bailey and Graham Baughn, all wealthy Savannah bootleggers, and other prominent prisoners were involved in the case.

Alleged familiar relations of Franklin Dodge, government investigator, with Mrs. Remus, which since that time have been aired in divorce proceedings filed by Remus, were begun during the trial here which lasted several weeks, according to records.

Inmates of the prison are said to have threatened the lives of government witnesses after the expose, and they were removed to a prison at Athens for safe keeping. It was charged that the government was pampering the witnesses and they were removed to Atlanta after several months stay at what the defense branded a jail paradise.

Sartain and Riehl were sentenced February 20, 1925, and after losing appeals to the higher courts, began serving their terms February 28, 1927. Both have served more than one-third of their sentences and are eligible to parole if recommended by the parole board.

New Miss America Amazes

:: BEAUTY CONTEST WINNER WANTS TO STUDY ART ::

Atlantic City by Swimming

Atlantic City, September 10.—(United News.)—Amazed, even stunned, Atlantic City's beach-going population today saw with incredulous eyes the winner of a bathing beauty contest go in swimming.

More or less impervious to the bewildered crowds, "Miss America of 1927," hitherto Miss Lois Eleanor Delander, of Joliet, Ill., spent a part of the afternoon in the Atlantic. Never, in the memory of the oldest ripple, had it happened before.

Miss Delander later retired to her hotel and was interviewed.

At the age of 16 and a high school student, the prospect of a stage career fails to dazzle the girl, she said.

"I've already had lots of offers, but I don't think I'll accept them. I'll talk it over with mother and daddy," she told the reporters.

"I'm more interested in art than anything else and want to go to a good art school."

To a questioner who asked her favorite pastimes Miss Delander replied, "swimming and dancing."

The new Miss America is a slender girl with light, brown hair, unbobbed, and won the crown, one of the judges, said, "because she is not only beautiful but sensible and intelligent."

C. F. Williams, New York artist and one of the 15 judges said today that selection of the Joliet girl showed that "the trend in beauty is away from the flapper type."

"It is a triumph of art over caricature," he went on. "The beauty that is less striking is becoming more popular."

W. R. Stevens, of New York, another judge, said that Miss Delander's was a natural slenderness and he spoke crisply of girls who diet to maintain a boyish figure.

"They destroy their own body tissue, grow hideous and grow old before their time," he said.

Straw Fedora Is Doomed

MERCHANTS SET TO SUPPLY DEMAND FOR NEW FELTS

To Junk Heap Thursday

By Loyd A Wilhoit.

Now comes the time for the preening mere male to emulate the "wanton lapwing" of Tennyson's famous poem and "get himself another crest."

In other words, the day of the straw hat draws rapidly toward evening, and the dawn is breaking for the felt lid of the vintage of 1927. September 15 will mark the obsequies of one and the birth of the other, and Atlanta's progressive merchants are all set for handling the regular rush.

Seems only a few short days ago since this writer was chronicling the approach of the alfalfa kelley as spring birds chirped and lambs frolicked or were made into appetizing chops for protesting kids with queezy stomachs.

But since that time "time has elapsed,' as the movie titles have a habit of putting it; tempus has fugit, and the year has fallen into the season of the "sere and yellow leaf." Therefore, the felt hat must have its day along with football practice and county fairs and circus billboards and plans for 'possum hunts.

Conferences with hat stylists disclose the fact that there will be little change in makeup from last year's vogue, except that brightly-colored bands will pass into the limbo of forgotten but not forgiven things. Bands will go in for solid colors this year, colors that will provide contrast with the material of the hat itself.

Brims will be a trifle narrower than last year and colors will be the various shades of tans and grays, with a few greens and browns. This variety of tints will give the discriminating dresser an opportunity to select as many hats as he has suits, in keeping with the growing ensemble wardrobe idea. The welt brim will be most popular this year, it is said, but roll, snap, raw and other brims will continue to be shown.

Whether you can sport one or a dozen hats, you're due to blossom forth in a glistening new felt next Thursday.

Do your shopping early.

POWER COMPANY, CITY DEADLOCKED

ment property in the Connally building, and if acceptable to the city, probably will be followed by a similar request from the bank. Acceptance of the plan also probably would avert damage suits by the two large property holders affected by construction of the approach.

The communication follows:

"Owners of the Atlanta and Lowry National bank and the Connally building, the only modern steel constructed buildings, and the most valuable properties affected by the proposed viaducts, have protested against the construction of the Alabama street approach to the Pryor street viaduct, as proposed on the Whitehall street level.

"This grade will destroy entrance and exit to six income producing Alabama street stores in the Connally building, valued at $15,000 to $18,000 a year, also the Alabama street entrance to the offices above, which is valuable to the tenants of the building.

Previous Protests.

"We have protested at several committee meetings against such action, which will penalize us heavily. It was suggested that damage to the Connally building, the Atlanta National Bank building and other properties could be avoided by beginning the approach 90 feet east of Whitehall street, which would not interfere in any essential way with the solution of the viaduct problem. We think this suggestion reasonable and feasible.

"If our contention is not upheld, and it is decided to build the approach on the Whitehall level grade, we suggest, in order to minimize damage, that access be allowed to these stores and the building proper as outlined on plans drawn by C. C. Whitaker, consulting engineer for the bond commission, showing an easement or areaway of four feet in the Alabama street sidewalk. There are many such easements in Atlanta.

"The Connally building is assessed at approximately $600,000 and pays $40 a day taxes. There is a heavy mortgage on it, interest on which has to be met; also annual payment on principal. We need all the revenue possible to meet these demands. Foundations are now in place to carry a 16-story building, which we wish to erect as soon as conditions warrant. We hope we will not have to contend with unnecessary depletion in earning power.

"This property has been owned by members of the Connally family for 80 years. We have never had any friction with the city, and wish none. We have helped build it.

"It hardly behooves gentlemen with old buildings, which need renovation or reconstruction to treat slightingly the immense damage to this modern building, successfully operated. Such disregard of property rights will not meet with favorable consideration by the committee or council. If a distinction is to be made in the treatment of property, we respectfully suggest that ancient and wornout buildings without tenants would not be deserving of the same consideration as a fully tenanted, new, up-to-date steel and concrete building, which it would be impossible to adjust to changed conditions. Our building was planned at great expense to meet what was thought to be a permanent grade on Alabama street.

"We trust that you will see fit, if you adopt the Whitehall street level plan of the approach to the viaduct, to adopt the Whitaker plans. Many similar adjustments exist here now, and damage wuld be much less.

"Confidence of investors that the city of Atlanta will treat them fairly, will develop the city far more than all the viaducts and material improvements that can be made.

"Very truly yours.

ASHEVILLE NAMED HOST FOR 1929 ACACIA MEETING

Estes Park, Colo., September 10.—(AP)—Asheville, N. C., has been chosen for the 1929 conclave of the Acacia national Masonic college fraternity, it was announced today, following the conclusion of the seventeenth annual conclave here last night.

William S. Dye, of Pennsylvania State college, was elected president of the organization.

ASSISTANT POSTMASTER AT DEMARK, S. C., HELD

C. Wilson Sauls, assistant postmaster at Denmark, S. C., has been arrested on charges of theft and rifling of test letters, according to a wire received Saturday by Joe P. Johnston, postoffice inspector in charge, from Inspector Frank Ellis. The telegram said that the evidence is complete, and that a full confession and the contents of the test letters were obtained.

Reports to the effect that Mayor John L. Duvall would resign at a special meeting of the city council Monday night were branded by the mayor as without foundation.

ONLY CRUST TOUCHED OF BIG CONSPIRACY.

Vincennes, Ind., September 10.—(AP) Thomas H. Adams, publisher of the Vincennes, Ind., Commercial, whose publicity broadsides first precipitated Indiana's political corruption inquiry, today took the view that yesterday's indictments touched "only the crust of the big conspiracy."

The Marion county grand jury at Indianapolis yesterday returned an indictment charging conspiracy to commit a felony against Governor Ed Jackson, George V. Coffin, Marion county political chairman and Robert I. Marsh, former klan attorney. Mayor John L. Duvall, of Indianapolis, was indicted for alleged violation of the corrupt practices act.

"There are far worse offenses than the present indictments, yet to be exposed," a statement from Adams said.

"We do not rejoice in the downfall of any man," it said, "but the back of the rule of law breaking is broken.

AGNES SCOTT GIVES FACULTY CHANGES

Decatur, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Agnes Scott college will open for the fall session on September 14 at 10 o'clock. A full quota of faculty and students will be on hand and all indications point to the best year of the institution's life, Dr. J. R. McCain states.

Rev. Wade Hampton Boggs, D. D., pastor of the Druid Hills Presbyterian church, will deliver the special address of the opening exercises, and other brief messages will be given by the president of the alumnae association, Mrs. J. Sam Guy; the chairman of the board of trustees, J. K. Orr, and President McCain. All friends of the college are invited to be present.

There are a number of changes in the faculty list for the year. Some of these are additions to the number on the staff, others are appointments to take the place of faculty members who have resigned and others are filling temporary places for members who are away on leave of absence, it is announced.

Professor George P. Hayes is to take the place of Dr. John W. Good in the English department. He has served as the head of the English department at Robert college, Constantinople.

Professor James M. Wright will be in charge of economics and sociology, the position held last year by Miss Davis. He comes to Agnes Scott from Centre college, Kentucky.

Miss Helen Gilroy will be acting professor of physics during the absence of Miss Howson, who is studying for her Ph. D. degree at Wisconsin. She comes to Agnes Scott from the Canton Christian college in China.

Dr. Charles A. Logan has been secured as acting professor of Bible during his stay in America this year. He has been a missionary in Japan for a number of years.

In the French department Miss Louise Hale is away studying for her doctorate and her work will be largely cared for by Miss Phythian, whose classes in turn will be handled chiefly by Miss Vivian Little. Miss Margaret Bland, who has received her M. A. degree at the University of North Carolina, will return to her work this session.

In English Miss Laney will be away again in order to complete her work for her Ph. D. at Yale and Miss Daisy Frances Smith will be studying at the University of Pennsylvania. Miss Janef Preston will continue to carry in part, at least, the work of Miss Laney and Miss Elizabeth Cheatham, who graduated at Agnes Scott college and has been teaching at Athens, Ga., will take the place of Miss Smith, it is stated.

Miss Charlotte Hammond, who took her B. A. at Agnes Scott and M. A. at the University of Chicago, will be acting assistant professor in Latin. She relieves Miss Martha Stansfield, who will be studying for her doctorate at the University of Chicago.

The work in psychology and education has become so heavy that an additional instructor is necessary and Miss Ethel Pike, who received her M. A. at Emory university and who has been head of the department at Grenada college, will fill the place.

In physical education Miss Isabel Randolph, who was away on leave last year, will return and Miss Llewellyn Wilburn will continue with her as leading members of the department. Miss Estelle North, who has graduated from the University of Wisconsin, will be the assistant.

As Miss Phillipa Gilchrist is studying at the University of Wisconsin, her place is filled for this year by Miss Margaret Whitington, who has been a fellow in the department of chemistry at Agnes Scott.

In physics Miss Elizabeth Lynn, who graduated at Agnes Scott, has been employed and in mathematics Miss Grace Strauss, who graduated at the University of Georgia with Phi Beta Kappa, will be in charge. Miss Carolina McCall, who graduated last year, will be an assistant in English and will also be an assistant in the book store.

Miss Helen Lewis and Miss Frances Rainey are two others of the class of 1927 who will be back. Miss Lewis will be a fellow in history, succeeding Miss Sterling Johnson, who is going away to study, and Miss Rainey will be a fellow in chemistry, taking the work which Miss Whitington had last year.

LEAGUE IS SILENT ON $2,000,000 FUND

Geneva, Switzerland, September 10. (AP)—League of Nations officials declined to confirm or deny today that the Rockefeller Foundation had donated the fund of $2,000,000 which has been offered from America to build and endow a library for the League of Nations. Officials said they preferred to await definite acceptance of the gift by the assembly before making any announcement.

The impression prevailed in league circles, however, that either the Rockefeller Foundation itself, or one or both of the Rockefellers, had offered the gift.

No conditions are attached to the donation, it is stated, the league being entirely free to decide what proportions to go to the construction of the building and what part to the endowment. It is said that the endowment, if accepted, will be made to, and not substituted for, such amounts as the assembly may allot annually for the library.

BAPTISTS TO MEET NEAR ADAIRSVILLE

Cartersville, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The Middle Cherokee Baptist association, which is made up of churches of this denomination in Bartow county, convenes Wednesday with the Cedar Creek church, four miles east of Adairsville, Judge William T. Townsend, moderator, announces.

Dr. Arch C. Cree, of Atlanta, and other leaders of the denomination in the state, are expected to attend the sessions, which will continue through Thursday.

HOLIDAY OVER, CITY SCHOOLS BECKONING

Patrons who are inclined to be impatient over the transfer of children must remember that it is not the fault of the administration, but the failure of the city to provide sufficient funds.

"The Atlanta Opportunity school will open Monday at the Commercial High building and all students interested should enroll at once. All night schools will open Monday night at 6 o'clock. If students are to enter these special schools they are urged to do so Monday in order that arrangements may be made for sufficient teachers. Non-resident students must pay their tuition before applying for registration ticket, tuition payable to E. L. McCullough, second floor of the school administration building, 165 Walker street."

Children's features predominate on the 1927 program of John Robinson's circus, which comes here for two exhibitions, afternoon and night, on Monday, September 19. Young patrons and visitors will find a zoo, with small lions and tigers, youthful elephants and camels, as well as diminutive ponies and other baby animals. Nothing has been overlooked in the menagerie department to make it attractive to the children, as they will find it well stocked with all the animals that appear in their story books.

A half score of midget clowns, among them the Simmons twins, George Harmon and Denny Sullivan, will scamper around the "big top." Dog any pony acts are also placed in advantageous locations.

In fact, everything that will make circus day a happy and joyous occasion for the kiddies has been included in the big John Robinson circus family.

FURNISHING THE HOME :: MARIAN MOORE

There is, and has been for the last eighteen months or so, a keen interest in furniture of the Spanish Renaissance Period. A lot of it is manufactured; much of it is good; some is not so good; how are you going to tell the difference? The price-tag may be misleading. The buyer's only safeguard is, therefore, to be familiar with genuine Spanish Renaissance furniture and to see that its spirit—not merely the details of decoration—is carried out in the modern reproductions. Thus furniture may be acquired that will give service for many years, without losing its interest, which would not be true of fads and senseless innovations.

Made to Last.

The first point to notice is the sturdiness of the construction. Spanish Renaissance furniture may be elegant, it is never flimsy. In old Spain, there were laws passed and enforced regarding the materials and workmanship of furniture in order to protect the public. The woods used were mostly walnut and oak; these were cut into honest squares and rectangles to make table tops, chair backs and seats, varguenos or writing desks, etc. These main pieces were held together and supported chiefly by trestle-like legs, one pair at each end of tables, splayed outward and connected by a wrought-iron brace; chairs, too, were strongly braced, though with wood instead of iron. Red and green velvet, and leather, are the fabrics of the Period; the velvets were richly embroidered and fringed with gold, the leather was tooled and colored in intricate designs, characteristic of the Moorish influence then present in the art of Spain; often the velvet or leather was strained over wood. It does seem, doesn't it, as if this type of furniture had been made to last?

Richly Decorated.

Now let's consider its attractiveness. We spoke of square or rectangular wood surfaces used for the body of each piece; but these surfaces were either finely carved in a close fine effect; or beautifully decorated with moldings applied in geometric patterns; or richly inlaid with bone, brass, silver or tortoise-shell. Elaborate metal mounts were also used, and studdings of gilt nails; sometimes a design was formed of the nails. The square outline was often relieved by curving lines, mostly at the top of chairs, between finials. (Finials, as you know, are ornaments which terminate the upper part of the vertical supports.) The legs, trestles and stretchers also contributed their share of handsomeness by introducing spirals, turned effects and a decorative motif known as the "Spanish scroll;" ask your furniture dealer to show you a bench with the Spanish scroll foot, or at least a picture of one on page 24 of the Furniture Dealers' Reference Book for 1927, figure 10.

English Chairs of Spanish Descent.

Most of the Spanish Renaissance furniture made today is far less elaborate than the antique models; we have done away with most of the inlays and embroideries but the outlines remain fundamentally the same; and the leather, wrought iron and brass nail features are still much in evidence. You will notice, as you study Period reproductions, that some of the Spanish characteristics are present in English specimens; this is because the Flemish and Dutch provinces were for a long time under the rule of Spain and adopted its styles to a certain extent, and these in turn penetrated into England through the caprices of wars and political events; thus one of the chairs pictured above is the ancestor of the Charles II chair, which is part of the Spanish art booty which the king brought back with him after his exile among the Dutch, while the other developed in England as the Yorkshire or Derbyshire chairs with arches and spindles.

The Typical Spanish Interior.

To complete our acquaintance with Spanish Renaissance furniture, we need to visualize the kind of home for which it was originally designed; we must remember that Spain had, for several centuries, been occupied by the Moors, a people come from northern Africa; they were Orientals who used but little furniture, and whose religion forbade the representation of living bodies as an expression of art; they relieved the bareness of their homes with hangings and architectural ornaments. This is why the furniture that was developed as a consequence of these conditions was very rich and decorative; it needs to be displayed, as it used to be, against a background of plain walls, rough or sand plastered preferably. More vital, than actual Spanish architecture to the full beauty of Spanish furniture, is the need of vigorous coloring, first to restore the atmosphere of Oriental lavishness that could best express itself through this medium, and also because in Spain, due to the climate, the light is very bright, the hues vivid and the contrasts violent. Rich yellows, reds and greens are particularly felicitous; I could not suggest anything better than draperies of some boldly striped sunfast weave or damask, hanging from a wrought iron pole, and beautiful wall tapestries in harmonizing colors, placed above the low, wide pieces of furniture to create interesting groups.

Pieces Suited to Ordinary Rooms.

In selecting Spanish furniture for your home, pay strict attention to size, as some of the pieces are much too large for the average house, dining room sets in particularly, though they are extremely handsome and well worth having if the proportions of the room allow it. On the other hand, there are some pieces: desks, end-tables, book troughs, etc., which have distinctive Spanish traits, yet whose size is perfect for a small interior; the varguenos, too, are increasingly popular as Radio cabinets as well as writing desks. Such furniture harmonizes with pieces made of the same wood, whose outline is simple and sturdy and which have some similar features and the same "spirit;" for, after all, it is the spirit of a Period, expressed through form, that governs its affinities.

Be sure to save all these lessons on Period Furniture for future reference.

MARION MOORE'S ANSWERS.

Question—I have a sofa and four chairs which have been in the family for 50 or 60 years, and which are badly in need of repairs; they all should be recovered, and three of the chairs have wobbly legs. I do not want, however, to spend money on these pieces if you don't think they are worth it. The seats are quite stiff, with upholstery fabric stretched taut over them. The frame is elaborately carved and it seems to me, just in the wrong places, as I always hit a sharp flower or leaf when I try to rest my head on the back cushions. These cushions are too low, anyway, and rather small and hard; they force you to sit up straight.

Answer—From your description, I have no doubt that your furniture belongs to the Victorian era, and deserves all you say about it. The chairs and sofas do not fulfill their purpose of comfortableness; and as to good looks, I have my own dark suspicions! I suggest that you waste not a cent on this furniture, but replace it with pieces that will pass the double test of utility and beauty.

Ministers To Meet.

The faculty of the Columbia seminary and any visiting ministers in the city have been extended an invitation to be present at the regular meeting Monday at 10 o'clock of the Atlanta Presbyterian Minister's association, according to T. P. Burgess, secretary.

23 ROBBERIES LAID TO "CAT BANDIT"

Chicago, September 10.—(AP)—William Eddie Baker, the "cat bandit," or William Mitchell as he was known here, today was charged with 23 robberies, 16 burglaries and two attempted robberies.

Charges of assault upon at least two of his victims may be filed against Baker.

Mrs. Baker, said to be the daughter of a St. Louis physician, was booked as an accessory after the fact. She was released on bond.

Baker, first regarded as the son of a "prominent southern family" and a former St. Louis football player, now is said to be the son of Clifford Baker, of Cleveland. Now, it seems, according to Baker's latest story, the "cat" attended Centre college, Danville, Ky., and knew members of the famous "Praying Colonels" football team. Baker said he enlisted in the army from Akron, Ohio, in 1917. He also claimed to have been a sparring partner of Benny Leonard.

"The Cat," who gained the sobriquet because of the stealthy way he pounced upon his robbery victims, vanishing as stealthily, suffers from dementia praecox and is a kleptomaniac, his attorney, Louis Piquett, believes.

MEXICAN WOMAN DIES IN ATTACK BY BANDITS

Nogales, Ariz., September 10.—(AP) Dispatches to the Herald from Guadalajara, Jalisco, Mexico, said the town of Totatiche, located in the municipality of Colotlan, Jalisco, had been taken by a large force of rebels headed by Pedro Quintanar.

One woman, Paula Herrera, was said to have been killed during the attack which was made Thursday following several days of intensive activities in the district.

Telegraphic communications with Mexico City were severed by the raiders and a number of villages near Totatiche were sacked by the band.

Federal troops guarding the town were quickly dispersed due to the superior number of the rebels, who were said to have marched into the town with some semblance of military order.

Immediately on receipt of news of the town's surrender reaching Guadalajara, federal troops stationed at Carrizal and Huacasco were sent to assist detachments stationed in the municipality of Colotlan.

The dispatches declared that rebel and bandit activity in the state of Nayarit, which borders Jalisco on the west, still continues and that the town of Acaponeta, on the Southern Pacific of Mexico railway, had been raided a number of times.

HICKS MURDER CASE JURY IS DEADLOCKED

Fort Lauderdale, Fla., September 10.—(AP)—For the second time within three hours the jury holding the fate of William A. Hicks, former deputy sheriff of Broward county, and charged with first-degree murder in connection with the death of Robert R. Barber two years ago, reported a disagreement here at 9:40 o'clock tonight. They first reported at 6:10 p. m.

The jury, as in the first case, was again ordered to retire to its chamber and continue deliberations by Judge L. L. Parks, of Tampa, presiding at the trial. Judge Parks told the jurors to discuss the case until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning if necessary and report to him at that time.

The jury intimated that it was utterly impossible to reach a verdict. O. S. Peck, foreman of the jury, informed Judge Parks that they could not agree after 11 hours. The jury received the case at 10:40 o'clock this morning.

Rumors, said to come from reliable sources, were circulated after the jury made its second report intimating that the body stood 11 to 1 for conviction. One juror was reported holding steadfastly for acquittal.

FIRST BROADCAST OF NEW AMERICAN OPERA ON SEPT. 18

New York, September 10.—(AP)—The first broadcast of the new American opera, "The King's Henchman," with Deems Taylor, composer, directing a cast recruited largely from the Metropolitan Opera company, will feature the radio debut of the Columbia broadcast system on September 18, it was announced today.

U. S. DESTROYER FROM CHINA CITY MOVES FOREIGNERS

(Copyright, 1927, by the Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Peking, September 10.—Heavy arrivals of Hankow troops continue at Wubu, flooding the city with Central bank notes which the populace is forced to accept. The disorder has become such that the destroyer Simpson, of the United States fleet, has been notified to evacuate the foreign women and children.

WIDOW, DAUGHTER TO SHARE FORTUNE OF W. L. WALKER

New York, September 10.—(AP)—Ninety per cent of the million dollar estate of William L. Walker, former vice president of the American Tobacco company, will be divided equally between his widow and daughter, it was disclosed today when the will was filed for probate.

The widow is Mrs. Jane Haskell Walker, daughter of former Governor Haskell C. Hines, of Kinston, N. C.

The will provides that 10 per cent of the estate be divided between Walker's brother and two sisters.

MYSTERIOUS ATTACKER WOUNDS NEGRO MAN

Emory Justice, negro, was treated at Grady hospital Saturday night for a bullet wound in the left shoulder received when standing in the yard of the residence of a white citizen on Robbins street.

The negro was found lying wounded by his brother-in-law, who had been notified by some negroes who were passing the home when the shots were fired.

Justice told Detectives H. W. Armstrong and J. M. Austin that he was waiting in the yard for his girl when someone fired at him. Detectives ordered him held at the hospital pending investigation of the shooting.

COSGRAVE OFFERS TO FORGIVE, FORGET

Dublin, Irish Free State, September 10—(AP)—President Cosgrave, head of the Irish Free State government, who has addressed scores of meetings in the provinces in the last few days in the general election campaign, has just made a notable declaration with a view to terminating the political turmoil. He said:

"I am prepared to forget and forgive, difficult as that is, but on certain conditions, one of which is that the majority will of the people must decide all issues.

"If the De Valera party will surrender the arms they dumped when fighting ceased in 1923 there will be no necessity to put the public safety act into operation. We insist that the state must have control of all the arms in the country."

President Cosgrave's offer to Eamon De Valera, however, is not taken very seriously. It is pointed out by Cosgrave's opponents that he knows De Valera has no control over arms and the arms section of the republicans long ago repudiated the authority of De Valera and the political section, and that, therefore, De Valera would be powerless to surrender the arms.

JUDGE GEORGE HILLYER SERIOUSLY ILL HERE

Friends and relatives of Judge George Hillyer, well-known Georgia jurist and former mayor of Atlanta, are apprehensive over the outcome of his illness, suffered by the judge some four days ago. Judge Hillyer was 92 years of age last March, but despite his extreme age, it is hoped that an unusually vigorous constitution will rally from the sudden attack.

ARMY RESERVATION IN LOUISIANA SOLD

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—The war department announced today sale to the state of Louisiana of the Fort McComb military reservation on Lake Bogne, Orleans parish, for the appraised value of the land, $11,487.

The post was formerly known as Fort Wood and contains approximately sixteen acres.

PERSHING LEADS FRENCH INVASION

Angeles and the semi-rigid airship J-13 cruised in the rear of the faster units of the air convoy.

Navy destroyers and a score of tugs followed the ship and a fireboat tossed up jets of water which fell across the wake in cascades of rainbowed mist. From the municipal tug Macon, Vice President Dawes shouted his last farewell to General Pershing on the bridge of the Leviathan.

A few moments before he had sent from the Macon by radio to General Pershing the message: "Your comrades who have to stay at home send you their love and wish you Godspeed."

Restrictions Lifted.

In addition to the legionnaires, the vessel carried 154 ordinary passengers. Commodore Hartley, master of the Leviathan and also a member of the legion, announced that all restrictions governing the use of first-class accommodations by passengers traveling second class would be lifted for the voyage.

Howard P. Savage, national commander of the legion, also was one of the passengers.

"I know our trip will be a success," he said, "because I know the legionnaires. They are the finest citizens of America."

FIVE CABINET MEMBERS WILL ADDRESS LEAGUE.

Paris, September 10.—(AP)—President Doumergue and not fewer than five cabinet ministers will deliver addresses during the American Legion convention week, beginning September 19, and virtually every member of the government will attend one or more sessions of the convention.

Apparently some misunderstanding occurred at Cherbourg where the local authorities announced today that the government had refused to grant permission for a public manifestation and parade at Cherbourg on the arrival of the American legionnaires aboard the Leviathan September 16. This immediately brought forth a denial from the ministry of the interior. The statement was made that all measures would be taken by the ministry to insure that the program of the Cherbourg reception committee is carried out.

French Participation.

Arrangements for the government's participation in the legion convention were discussed today at a council of ministers held at Rambouillet. President Doumergue, it later was announced, will attend the opening session at the Trocadero September 19, but will not speak—the French constitution preventing him from doing so. The official representative of the government on that occasion will be Louis Marin, minister of pensions.

The government's official welcome to the legion to France will be made by Premier Poincare at a dinner to the officials of the legion by the government on Sunday, September 18. M. Tardieu will speak Monday evening at a banquet, while M. Painleve and M. Leygues, ministers of war and marine, respectively, will deliver addresses at a dinner Tuesday night.

INHERITANCE TAX REPEAL IS ASKED

definite recommendations which the chamber proposes:

Reduction in corporation income tax; repeal of the federal estate tax; repeal of the war excise taxes levied on particular businesses; simplification of both law and administration governing the internal revenue system; revision of provisions of the statute affecting the income accruing from installment selling; establishment and maintenance of a reasonable balance between the federal revenues and expenditures; ample facilities and opportunity for a thorough-going study of all phases of taxation and tax administration by a joint congressional committee.

With 22 state legislatures joining in the movement, the state delegates formed a committee which announced after meeting that it had set October 21 as the date for the first session of a new organization to be known as the National Conference of State Legislatures.

A constitution was adopted providing for a review by the conference of all acts of congress relating to questions of concurrent legislation, and calling for a balance of power of federal and state governments and an opportunity for the states to present their views to congress on all matters of legislation affecting the rights of states.

A committee was appointed to arrange with the ways and means committee of the house for time to present its views at hearings on the new tax bill.

JUDGE ANNOUNCES PICKETING RULES

Steubenville, Ohio, September 10.—(AP)—Only American citizens who speak the English language will be permitted to serve as union pickets around the properties of coal companies in five eastern Ohio counties, under the terms of a preliminary injunction issued here today by Judge Benson W. Hough in United States district court.

Furthermore, Judge Hough announced that he would recommend the deportation of any person convicted of violating the injunction who is not an American citizen.

The injunction, granted on application of four coal companies, specified that not more than three persons should occupy on picket post, that the posts must be at least 700 yards apart and that they were not to be closer than 100 yards from any mining property.

Intervening Petition.

Immediately after the injunction was issued, spokesmen for five other coal companies operating in the affected area indicated they would file an intervening petition next Tuesday seeking to enter the case as joint complainants in order to receive the protection of the order.

The injunction was announced following a conference in chambers between Judge Hough, Adjutant General Henderson, of the Ohio national guard, the county attorneys and sheriffs of the five counties involved, Marshal Stanley Borthwick, of the southern Ohio federal judicial district, and counsel for the operators and miners.

Judge Hough told the county officials that while Marshal Borthwick would be directly in charge of the enforcement of the order, it would be up to them to cooperate fully and that he would expect them to assume the responsibility. Counties in which the injunction applies are Belmont, Harrison, Jefferson, Tuscarawas and Columbiana.

Threats Are Barred.

The injunction stated specifically that pickets would not be permitted to threaten working miners in any way or to use offensive language in addressing them. Several modes of address were singled out by the court as being barred.

The injunction was based on testimony adduced at a hearing which ended Thursday. Witnesses for the operators testified to depredations alleged to have been committed against property and assaults on nonunion workers.

The complaining companies are the Clarkson Coal and Mining company, the Boomer Coal and Coke company, the Monroe Coal company and the Atlantic Construction company. The injunction is directed against officers and members of the miners' union.

Coal operators expressed the belief that it would pave the way for a widening of their activities in reopening the mines, and several said they expected to see a number of mines start up next week.

J. L. Good, secretary of the Ohio coal bureau and a spokesman for the Ohio Operators' association, declared that "within the next few days several hundred miners will be added to the pay rolls."

FORGERY CHARGE AGAINST MEANS IS NOL PROSSED

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—Gaston B. Means, former department of justice agent, now serving a two-year sentence in Atlanta federal penitentiary, who was a witness before the senate committee investigating Attorney General Daugherty, will not be prosecuted on a charge of forging the name of Senator Brookhart, of Iowa, as Federal District Attorney Gordon here has nolle prossed the case. Means was indicted in 1925 for the alleged forging of the senator's name to a letter directing him to produce various records and reports before the committee. He is serving in the prison for a stock mail fraud and the authorities here decided not to arrest him upon its expiration, as he already had served a previous two-year term for a liquor conspiracy.

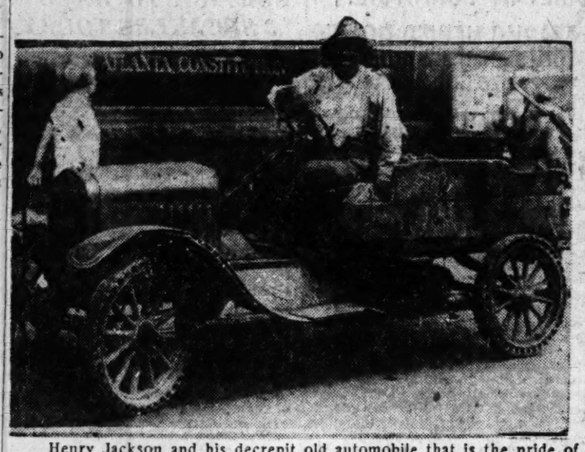

Makes Fat People Slim

New York Physician Perfects Simple and Easy Method of Reducing Weight.

Dr. R. Newman, a licensed practicing physician, of 286 Fifth avenue, New York, announces that he has perfected a treatment which has quickly rid fat people of excess weight. What is more remarkable is the Doctor's statement that he has successfully treated thousands of patients for fat reduction without unnecessary change of diet or burdensome exercise. He also says that fat people who suffer from chronic rheumatism, gout, asthma and high blood pressure obtain great relief from the reduction of their superfluous flesh. Realizing that this sounds almost too good to be true, the Doctor has offered to send without charge to anyone who will write him, a free trial treatment to prove his claims, as well as his "Pay-when-reduced" plan. If you want to rid yourself of superfluous fat, write him today, addressing Dr. R. Newman, 286 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Dept. R.—(adv.)

Ancient Vintage Flivver Is Pride of Owner' Heart

MECHANICAL STEED USED TO DELIVER ICE

Henry Jackson and his decrepit old automobile that is the pride of his heart.

Perhaps you've seen it passing on the streets—a flivver of almost incredibly ancient vintage that invariably is heralded by a series of snorts and backfirings and finally staggers into view with many a shudder and blind stagger to disappear under its own motive power.

And you've noticed that it never breaks down and refuses to snort and shudder. You've noted Henry Strickland seated in portly satisfaction at the steering wheel, and maybe a thin trickle of water from melted ice leaving a dark trail on the pavement.

Henry has been peddling ice all over Atlanta for so long that he's become a regular institution—and the dilipidated flivver is the pride of his heart.

"This car is probably the oldest in Atlanta," its colored owner said Saturday, "but it's a good car just the same. It looks terrible, but it runs just as good as it did the day it left the factory."

Henry bought the veteran auto second-hand three years ago—that is, he bought the chassis and made the truck body that perches aloft the frame. How old it is even Henry doesn't know, but he says he "tells 'em at the state license bureau that it must have been made about 1910."

If the car has an interesting history; if it has rambled for countless thousands of miles through rare and racy adventures during its life of approximately seventeen years, it keeps the fact strictly to itself.

Henry loves it, which aparently is enough to prompt the ashamatic vehicle to keep moving at his behest no matter what the toll of suffering in rheumatic universal joints and weary tires.

SouthernRailway Employees Here On Pension Meet

Hundreds of employees of the Southern Railway system began arriving in Atlanta Saturday night to attend the meeting today to perfect details of a pension plan. It was estimated Saturday night by the committee in charge of arrangements that more than 10,000 coming from all parts of the system will be present.

Mayor Pro Tem W. Guy Dobbs will deliver an address of welcome when the session first opens at 10 o'clock this morning, and the meeting then will be officially begun. It is expected that deliberations will consume the whole day.

There are 62,000 employees of the entire system, extending from New Orleans to Washington and from Cincinnati to Jacksonville. Tentative plans confemplate that all employees of the entire "Southern family," from the humblest to the president of the company, can participate in benefits of the pension.

Members of the committee in charge of arrangements are S. W. Davis, A. W. Corrie and Councilman H. Turner Loehr, of the first ward.

Lawyers To Seek Recorder's Court Consolidation

Resolutions asking for appointment of a committee to draft a petition requesting the consolidation of the morning and afternoon sessions of recorder's court, were unanimously adopted by the Lawyers' club of Atlanta at its monthly meeting.

Clarence Calhoun, former president of the lawyers' organization was appointed chairman of the committee by President William G. Grant and intends to call a meting of the committee during the first part of the week in order that the petition can be considered by the police committee of council at its regular meeting Wednesday night.

Recorder A. W. Callaway presided at the morning session of court and Recorder Murphy M. Holloway is on the bench at the 4:30 o'clock session.

General Winfield S. Edgerly, 81, Dies At Farmington

Farmington, N. H., September 10. (AP)—Brigadier General Winfield Scott Edgerly, U. S. A., retired, died today at his home here, where he was born 81 years ago. He was graduated at West Point in 1870 and was commissioned in the cavalry, serving through the Indian and Spanish-American wars and the Philippine insurrection. In 1907 he was appointed commander of the department of the gulf and was retired from active duty because of disability two years later.

'Varieties of '27 Scores Big Hit In Last Show

"Varieties of 1927," a vaudeville revue in eight acts, scored a tremendous success at its last performance Saturday night at Egleston hall. The show was presented by the Atlanta Young People's Service League union and consisted of the very latest in dancing, song hits, "big time minstrels" and—a "variety" of things.

The hall was completely thronged with persons who left the building with words of praise upon their lips, peppy tunes running through their minds and admiration for the cast.

"A Spanish Fantasy," the third act, brim full of song and dance, proved to be the feature of the presentation. Agnes Hydee and Fred Hicky took leading roles and were ably assisted by the cast, consisting of Mary Ellen Law, Christine Wolfle, Nana Wolfle, Jean Dozier, Ray Knight, Howard Callahan, Fanny Rogers, Joe Clark, Hugh Royer and Daisy Beane.

"Memoirs," the fourth act, also came in for its share of honors. This number was directed by Norman Beane, and the cast consisted of Minora Conley, Annie Mae Thompson and Don Veal.

The program was brought to a close by "The Spirit of the Minstrels," directed by W. C. Pauley. Byron Glover acted as interlocutor.

HOOVER TO VISIT ARKANSAS FLOOD CONTROL CHIEF

Little Rock, Ark., September 10.—(AP)—Secretary Herbert Hoover arrived here today and after a brief conference with Red Cross officials regarding relief work in Pulaski county, left for Hot Springs, where he will be a guest of Harvey C. Couch, flood control chairman in Arkansas, for several days.

Hoover said rehabilitation and reconstruction work in Arkansas had been more rapid and of a more permanent nature than he had anticipated.

The flood relief chief will attend a meeting of the tri-state flood control subcommittee at Hot Springs, at which definite action is expected to be taken on a permanent flood control program.

DRY LEADER PAYS MELLON TRIBUTE AND APOLOGIZES

Spokane, Wash., September 10.—(AP)—Dr. Clarence True Wilson, secretary of the board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Methodist church, has withdrawn his criticism of Secretary Mellon's recent appointments in the prohibition enforcement department.

"I want to take back all the mean things I have said about Secretary of the Treasury Andrew Mellon since his appointment of Lowman as assistant secretary of the treasury and Doran as prohibition commissioner," the Methodist leader declared here last night in an address at a church conference.

"If Secretary Mellon had searched all over the United States and consulted with leaders of prohibition, he could not have made better selections for carrying out the Volstead act and the provisions of the eighteenth amendment."

General Killed.

Mexico City, September 10.—(AP)—Jose Villa, rebel leader, and three of his followers are reported to have been killed by federal troops at Estanzuela, state of Zacatecas.

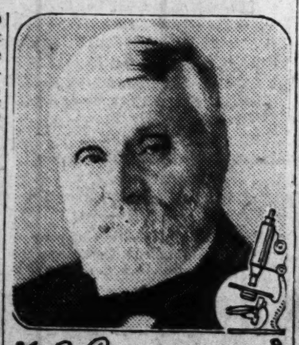

Old Folks Say Doctor Caldwell was Right

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public since 1892, as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Then, the treatment of constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild, and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will last a family several months, and all can use it. It is good for the baby because pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. In the proper dose, given in the directions, it is equally effective at all ages. Elderly people will find it especially ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

W. B. Caldwell M.D.
AT AGE 83

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.—(adv.)

MRS. LYDIG HOYT TO MARRY LOUIS CALHERN, ACTOR

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

New York, September 10.—The former Mrs. Lydig Hoyt, who is known on the stage as Julia Hoyt, is engaged to marry Louis Calhern, an actor.

The engagement was rumored last July but at that time Miss Hoyt denied it. She admitted today, however, that it was now a fact though she said that no date for the wedding had been set.

Miss Hoyt was formerly Miss Julia Wainwright Robbins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julian W. Robbins. When 17 years old, in 1914, she married Lydig Hoyt and became one of the younger social leaders of New York. In 1921 she decided to become a motion picture actress and appeared with Norma Talmadge. Then she abandoned the screen for the stage.

In 1924, in Paris, she divorced Hoyt. Calhern appeared in "The Dark" with her at the Lyceum theater last season.

YATESVILLE CLUB PLANS YEAR'S WORK

Thomaston, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The Yatesville Library club held its first meeting this week at the home of Mrs. O. B. Clements. Plans for the library were made for the ensuing year, and one of the main features was the improvement of the Joseph E. Johnston institute, which includes a large territory of the surrounding county. This school has taken in six small schools from its territory and is operating three trucks.

This club is one of the town's most progressive organizations for the upbuilding of civic matters in Yatesville.

LANDSCAPING STARTED ON CONSTITUTION HOME IN AVONDALE

Model Home Opening Date To Be Announced Shortly

Furnishing of Dwelling Is Principal Feature Left To Be Completed; Four Weeks' Exhibition Will Be Held.

With the structural phases of The Constitution model demonstration home in Avondale Estates completed, the building debris is being cleared away and landscaping started.

When the past week came to a close workmen had smoothed the front lawn, while portions of the shrubbery that will adorn the beautiful home built by Hoke N. Smith, noted home constructor, under supervision of Raymond C. Snow, prominent Atlanta architect, were planted. Because of the thoroughness and idyllic vision with which Avondale Estates was laid out, the street front of The Constitution model home is already provided with sturdy growing trees.

Last week final plans were being formulated for furnishing the dwelling. The undertaking has reached a stage that will permit announcement of the opening date shortly. At this time the residence, completely furnished and equipped by persons of talent and experience in this work, will be thrown open for public inspection over a period of four weeks. Throughout the construction period of the home many visitors have called to watch the demonstration of house building according to the highest ideals.

Constituting the superior construction features of the house, sponsored by The Constitution as its initial undertaking in connection with the Home Owners' institute national program for better building, are the materials nationally recognized for their merit and standard quality, the skilful workmanship directed by the master builder and the careful planning and supervision by an architect possessing expert knowledge of the small home problem.

From choice of the site, on a beautiful slightly elevated lot in the scenic surroundings of Avondale, to furnishing of the completed home with the latest and most approved trappings, all are in keeping with the unexcelled building materials. The landscaping work, which now occupies the center of activities at the model home site, is being done by expert artists and gardeners of Avondale whose previous work in that residential haven has won such high praise.

Home-owners and home-seekers of this community, for whose advantage The Constitution is sponsoring the erection of model demonstration houses, will gain new pointers on the most scientific and economic methods of building by visiting The Constitution home on Lakeshore drive in Avondale Estates.

Owner, Contractor Favor Linoleum

Home-owner, architect and laying contractor—each member of this important trio finds that linoleum has features which appeal to him especially.

Linoleum pleases the architect artistically and practically. For it makes a handsome, rich-toned floor suitable for almost any room in a new or remodeled home. It is moderate in price and guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Home-owners like the softness of color and luster in linoleum. They appreciate the life-long durability, the sanitary cleanliness and the moderate cost of this type of floor.

The increased flexibility of linoleum appeals especially to the laying contractor. For it permits him to do a quicker and better installation job.

Home With Two Baths and Seven Cedar Closets

Plans from Home Owner's Institute Inc ©1927

The small brick house featured as Plan No. 274-S was constructed in Omaha, Neb., as a model home on the national program of Home Owners Institute. It was designed by T. H. Maenner Co., architects, and contains many conveniences. Blueprints of our house plans and specifications, ready to build from, are available to our readers at low cost.

Common Brick, Stucco, Wood Combined in Today's Plan

BY L. PORTER MOORE
President, Home Owners Institute, Inc.

Most of the modern ideas that both home owner and architect try to include in the city, suburban or small country house today have been installed in the design pictured on this page, our plan No. 274-S. A glance at the floor plans will show that about all that's lacking for the modernist is a sun parlor or inclosed porch, but the rear paved terrace as indicated off the living room (the terrace or loggia out-of-doors being more popular in western and southern areas than is the inclosed porch) presents just the proper place and space to build a sun room if desired.

Two-car attached garage, breakfast room as well as full-size dining room, kitchen with outside icing facilities, downstairs lavatory, living room fireplace, built-in bookcase, entrance vestibule with coat closet, two bathrooms upstairs with inclosed shower in one, ample closet space and an attic wherein an additional room or two could be finished off, are among the popular features and conveniences. It is a plan well worth thorough study by any home seeker.

Architecturally, this seven primary room house, having four bedrooms, is of the increasingly popular English country or cottage style, somewhat Elizabethan. It has been designed by the T. H. Maenner company, architects, of Omaha, Neb., and is now being built in that city as a model demonstration home with the cooperation of the Home Owners' institute and the Omaha World-Herald.

The exterior of the home is attractively quaint. The personality of the slightly protruding entry with its sharply pointed roof-line, the curved top oak door with leaded glass panes and irregular facing of brick, is augmented by the tiny oak-shuttered flanking windows and most attractive little bay window above the entrance door, thus lighting the hall stairway. The graceful chimney with its capping chimney pots breaking above the roof line at two levels forms a harmonious feature. The exterior walls are of common brick relieved decoratively by half timber work on stucco in true English cottage style. The house is remarkably well adapted to the installation of up-to-date equipment. Suggested articles of equipment and standard materials are indicated on the plans by a series of numbers to which the key is as follows: One represents the gas range; two, the common brick walls; three, the automatic heat regulator; four, the slate roofing shingles; five, the electric refrigerator, or refrigerator to be iced from outside; six, the electric sink; seven, the built-in breakfast furniture; nine, the telephone niche; ten, the built-in bookcase.

According to the estimates of Arthur Bates Lincoln, consulting architect of Home Owners' institute, the house contains about 36,000 cubic feet. Outline of recommended specifications follow:

Masonry—Concrete footings under all walls, as shown on drawings. All foundation walls to be poured concrete made with Portland cement. Concrete to be mixed with waterproofing compound. Exterior walls and chimney of common brick; all flues lined. Fireplace of selected brick; provide ash dump with clean-out door in cellar.

Incinerator—Built-in incinerator to be installed in chimney with receiving hopper door located in or near the kitchen for disposal of garbage and trash.

Carpentry—All framing lumber shall be well seasoned and free from large knots, either Douglas fir or yellow pine. White pine for exterior mill work and interior trim; oak floors. Steel bridging for floor joists. Interior doors and built-in kitchen cabinet as required in detailed specifications.

Hardware—Owner shall furnish all finishing hardware for doors and windows, for closets and casework. The contractor will furnish a correct list of hardware and is to put it on in a careful, workmanlike manner. All hardware on exterior openings to be of brass or bronze.

Stucco Work—Where shown on plans walls shall be finished with three coats of Portland cement stucco. Finish coat colored and textured as directed Casement Windows—Steel casement windows may be used at owner's option.

Plastering and Lathing—Three-coat work over metal lath is recommended. A less expensive job may be obtained through the use of one-half inch of plaster over flat rib expanded metal lath or even wood lath. We suggest you obtain alternate bids on metal lath and wood lath. Insulating lumber or plaster board may be used if desired by owner.

Metal Work—Gutters, leaders, down spouts and flashing to be sixteen-ounce copper or No. 11 gauge zinc.

Roofing—Roof of slate-surfaced copper-clad asphalt or asbestos shingles; to be laid in accordance with manufacturer's instructions.

Painting—Strictly pure white lead and linseed oil in proper proportion with zinc oxide where desired, or a good grade of ready mixed paint shall be used. Interior trim to receive two good coats of flat paint and one coat of flat enamel. Finishing floors to be varnished or waxed throughout as directed.

Electrical Work—Complete system of electric wiring from meter to all outlets, including all panel boards, junction boxes and all other fittings. The installation must be in accordance with the rules and regulations of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Plumbing—A complete system of fixtures ready to use shall be provided as shown on plans and in accordance with local regulations. Brass piping for hot and cold water lines. Gas or coal fired hot water heater. Where sewer connections are not available use of reinforced concrete septic tank recommended.

Tile Work—Tile work and wainscot in bathroom with built-in china accessories.

Heating—Steam or hot water boiler, coal, oil or gas fired.

Temperature Control—Heat regulator with eight-day or one-day clock thermostat, limit control on boiler or furnaces, and electric or spring motor.

Insulation—Throughout with insulating building board (or insulating quilting if preferred), used as plaster base on ceiling, operates as roof insulation.

BUILT-IN FURNITURE MARKS NEWER HOMES

The modern custom of building a high percentage of domestic furniture into the house when it is in the course of construction has been hailed as a boon to the housewife who considers economy of cost and saving of labor important factors in the management of her home. Because of the recent wave of commendation which built-in features have received one is likely to believe that the idea is an entirely new one. Yet, this is not quite true.

Probably the first built-in feature that was introduced to home construction was the clothes closet, found in structures many centuries old. These closets were tucked away, in many instances under stairways to utilize space which otherwise would have been wasted. And following close in the wake of the antiquated clothes closet was the kitchen pantry.

Today the variety and scope of built-in features is almost without limitation. Bookcases, china cabinets, dressing tables, buffets, kitchen cabinets for provisions and utensils, breakfast nooks, wardrobe closets and clothes chests—the latter cleverly fashioned as window-seats and wall benches—are among the most outstanding features in public favor. Yet no list can be all-inclusive; new designs and new conveniences are being adopted rapidly by builders who want their residences to contain the latest developments in the built-in field.

As a matter of fact, the modern home is considered incomplete without several built-in features in each room. Their popularity is spreading so widely and the demand for them is so audibly expressed that many property owners, who constructed homes before the built-in era, are adapting various features to their completed buildings. As many of the features are designed for the purpose of such adaption they may be introduced in either new or old homes.

KENNEL CLUB SHOW WILL BE HELD HERE ON OCTOBER 6 TO 8

The Atlanta Kennel club's fourteenth annual bench show will be held at the Southeastern fair on October 6, 7 and 8, as a part of a circuit of seven shows to be held in as many southern cities. The circuit includes Louisville, Nashville, Knoxville, Little Rock, Memphis and Dallas, with the possibility of Macon and Montgomery holding shows at a later date.

The Atlanta Kennel club is the oldest show-giving club in the south and draws entries of high-class dogs from ten states. Almost every known breed of dog is sent here, the entries last year ranging from Great Danes, St. Bernards and bloodhounds to toy poodles and toy terriers. The Atlanta show will be judged by Alf Delmont, Wynnewood, Pa., one of the three or four ranking judges of the world. Mr. Delmont has judged dogs in every state, and several foreign countries, including England, Germany and Scotland. His knowledge of dogs of all breeds is thorough, and his reputation for fairness assures the novice exhibitor of an equal chance with the leading professional handlers, provided the novice has the better dog.

It is not generally known that entries for shows at which American Kennel club championship points are awarded must be made well in advance of the dates on which the show is to be held. The entries for the October show must be made by September 20, and made on regulation blanks. These blanks, and any other information, may be obtained from Mrs. R. C. Hackman, 430 Sterling street, N. E.

Rear Admiral McCully, Head of Sixth District, Inspecting Units Here

Rear Admiral Newton A. McCully, commander of the sixth naval district, was in Atlanta Saturday inspecting naval units here, including the local recruiting office and the R. O. T. C. reserve at Georgia Tech. Lieutenant Commander Robert A. Awtry accompanied him.

Admiral McCully, who ranks well up in the list of naval officers, attracted considerable attention just after the world war by his adoption of nine Russian orphans. Most of them still live with him at his Charleston residence.

Cement Has Flexibility.

American impatience with lost motion and delay is reflected in the pace of building as well as business. The time for money saving achieved by mass production and quickened turnover are paralleled in construction by the economics of concrete made with Portland cement. Building funds are given greater buying power. Rugged strength takes shapes of grace and dignity. Any tint or character of surface desired can be produced in stucco, cast stone or broad masses of poured concrete.

One Tone for Floors.

Many women like the floors in their homes to be of one color tone throughout. They want something modern, something truly decorative. And they seek floors that will look equally effective in dining room, living room and bedroom.

The Importance of Plastering

85% of the visible interior of every room is plaster. One bad crack, one set of dust streaks and the appearance of the entire room is spoiled. To prevent this trouble, the demonstration home under construction by The Constitution uses METAL lath and a full thickness of plaster. Whether you build or buy, the wisdom of specifying similar plastering work in your home will be proved by visiting this model house.

SALVATION ARMY SERVICE TO HAVE 3 SPEAKERS TODAY

Major William Noble, Emory university graduate, and now an officer in the Salvation Army; Lieutenant Commissioner Edgar Hoe, former territorial commander for the northern India province, and Commissioner Brengle will be speakers at an unusual religious service to be held in the Salvation Army hall, 54 Ellis street, at 8 o'clock Sunday night.

Major Noble was graduated from the Emory medical college and joined the Salvation Army while serving his internship at the army hospital in Covington, Ky. He was released from the Salvation Army to serve throughout the world war as lieutenant in the medical corps overseas with the ninetieth division, returning to its ranks after the armistice as head of the Catherine Booth hospital in Nagercoil Travancore in southeastern India, where he performed 1,500 major operations last year.

Commissioner Hoe is one of the veterans of the Salvation Army, having enlisted at Marylebony, England, in 1888, serving in Italy and at international headquarters before becoming territorial commander for northern India. Commissioner Brengle was an English university graduate and a doctor of divinity when he entered the Salvation Army and has been sent all over the world by the army as a traveling evangelist.

Music for the services will be provided by the Salvation choir and band.

Paint a Protection, Beautifier as Well.

The fulfillment of dreams is one of life's greatest joys. One of your dreams can come true immediately if you choose. Your longing for a charming home that breaths prosperity and happiness—a home that satisfies your desire for beauty can be gratified now!

Perhaps you are living in your dream house, but its beauty is hidden from you by a veil of dinginess and shabbiness. Remove the veil, have your house painted. Color and fresh, newly painted surfaces are the beauty secrets of a house. Let your dreams come true. Make your house your ideal. A new coat of paint will not only beautify your house, but it will also protect it.

ANXIOUS MOTHER ASKS INFORMATION OF MISSING SON, 13

An apprehensive mother, Mrs. C. W. Chunn, of 166 Berean avenue, S. E., awaits news of her 13-year-old son, Early, who disappeared on August 11, last, and has never been heard from since.

The lad is described as slight for his age, of an unusually dark complexion, with brown hair and eyes. It is thought he may have set out for Charleston, S. C., his former home, although he has no relatives there and was without money when he left.

Charleston police have been queried with no resultant trace of his whereabouts. The mother asks that residents along the Charleston-Atlanta railroad or motor routes communicate to her any information they may have of the boy.

A Remodeling Year.

That 1927 is a remodeling year cannot be questioned, says "Building Supply News." Up to date since the beginning of January a great number of dwellings have been transformed from ill-appearing neighborhood blots to some of the most picturesquely modern domiciles.

Paint has a hard mission to fulfill. You insist it must look well, wear well, cover much surface, and cost just as little as possible.

Very exacting requirements for paints that are not equal to the Tripod standard of quality.

This Notion of "Can't afford the Cost"

MR. and Mrs. Prospective Home Builder, do you realize that a well built home—one built of time-tested burned clay products, actually costs you less? The moment a "frame" house is finished, depreciation sets in. Forty years' time, and the average frame house is unfit for occupancy.

The average life of a home of enduring brick or tile comes close to 100 years! It doesn't even begin to depreciate for five years from the time it's built.

Don't grope in the dark as far as true building costs are concerned. Get the facts about burned clay products—read this book containing 62 pictures and designs of homes that can be built from $2,100 to $17,500.

RACING BALLOONS DRIFT EASTWARD

Detroit, September 10.—(AP)—Bearing the colors of eight nations, 15 huge silken bags floated from the Ford airport here today and headed in the general direction of the Atlantic as the beginning of competition for the Gordon Bennett trophy in the sixteenth international balloon race.

Each of the crews was determined to remain aloft until the furthest possible distance from the starting point had been reached.

The race may last as long as three days, according to statements from the balloon pilots before they cast off ballast and took to the skies. The pilots went aloft prepared to brave rain and wind and most of the balloons were equipped with rubber boats in case they should be forced down over water.

Promptly at 4 o'clock Major Enrique Maldanado and his aide, Major Benito Molas, threw off the ropes holding the huge bag, the Hispania, and rose into a cloudy, overhanging sky. A few minutes later the balloon was out of sight in the clouds. The other 14 entries followed at five-minute intervals.

The bags all followed a course directly east of Detroit, although it was believed they might be swept in a southernly direction by morning.

Major Andres, weather forecaster for the flight, announced at the start in all probability the balloons would be seen over western New York and Pennsylvania in the morning. An early report that several balloons had been sighted near Sandusky, Ohio, however, led him to believe that the bags may have been swept into the path of a north wind, which would blow them through Ohio and into the Virginias.

Winds were variable at the start of the race and weather reports presented such uncertain wind charts that it was believed that the race this year would be almost entirely one of pilot's skill in seeking "blindly" for the best wind current. The wind current shortly after the take-off averaged 16 miles an hour.

There will be no official report from the balloons until they land. The winner of the race will be the pilot who reaches the greatest distance from the starting point.

Maurice Biename, who holds the record for distance in the international event, 1,334 miles, was entered under the French flag in this year's race. France, Spain, Belgium, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, England and the United States are the other entries.

The contestants and the order in which they took off:

Hispania—Spain, Major Maldonado, pilot; Major Benitos Molas, aide.

Dux—Italy, Domenico Leone, pilot; Lieutenant Colonel Ugo Medori, aide.

Bee—England, R. S. Booth, pilot; G. F. Meager, aide.

Brandenburg—Germany, Dr. Reinhold Halben, pilot; Hugo Kaulen, aide.

Goodyear VI—United States, Ward T. Van Orman, pilot; W. T. Morton, aide.

Helvetia III Switzerland, Ernest L. Maag, pilot; Ernie Nageli, aide.

Lafayette—France, M. Georges Blanchet, pilot; Dr. George LeGallee, aide.

Belgicia—Belgium, Ernest de Muyter, pilot; M. De Soete, aide.

Rex—Italy, Major Eraldo Ilari, pilot; Giuseppe Paonessa, aide.

Munster—Germany, Ferdinand Eimermacher, pilot; Rudolph Predeek, aide.

Detroit—United States, R. G. Hill, pilot; A. G. Schlosser, aide.

Paris-Bruxelles—France, Maurice Biename, pilot; A. Veenstra, aide.

Wallonie—Belgium, H. Quersin, pilot; M. Theis, aide.

Barmen—Germany, Hugo Kaulen, Sr., pilot; Alexander Dahl, aide.

U. S. Army—United States, W. E. Kepner, pilot; W. O. Eareckson, aide.

MAN IS TRAMPLED IN WORKERS' RUSH AT QUITTING TIME

Terryville, Conn., September 10.—(AP)—Leon Kasper, 20, was standing just inside the gates at the Eagle Lock company's plant, here, when the 6 o'clock whistle blew last night. Today he is nursing three broken ribs as a result.

Kasper was knocked down and trampled on as the workmen rushed through the gate and when the last feet had walked on him he was picked up unconscious and rushed to the office of a physician.

PRINCE RUSPOLI WEDS DAUGHTER OF COUNT VOLPI

Venice, September 10.—(AP)—Prince Carl Maurice Ruspoli, scion of the famous Italian family, today was married by civil ceremony to Maria Volpi, daughter of Count Volpi, minister of finance. The marriage was performed by Count Pietro Orsi, podesta of Venice.

Mrs. Henry P. Fletcher, wife of the American ambassador, presented the bride with a beautiful gift.

ALLEGED WIFE SLAYER'S TRIAL FEATURES DOCKET

Raleigh, N. C., September 10.—(AP) With the murder charge against Dorsey St. Clair Hamilton, 45, former Norfolk, Va., painter, standing out as most prominent of 130 cases, Judge N. A. Sinclair, Fayetteville, Monday will open the September term of criminal superior court here.

Hamilton is charged with slaying his wife by firing five bullets into her body on August 5 at the home of Charles Harwood, near here. Hamilton is about recovered from wounds he inflicted on himself after the alleged shooting of his wife.

PARADOX FOUND IN KENTUCKY RACE

BY ARTHUR EVANS.
(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Louisville, Ky., September 10.—Governor Al Smith, of New York, will find his chances of getting any of Kentucky's delegates to the democratic national convention largely dependent upon the governorship election in this state next November. Politicians viewing the moralistic phenomena in the state campaign point out a seeming paradox.

If the democratic state ticket wins, it will mean "My Old Kentucky Good Night" so far as Governor Smith is concerned. It will freeze him out of Kentucky delegates.

On the other hand, a republican victory this fall in Kentucky, so the talent on both sides maintains, may mean that Smith has a fairly good chance to get some Kentucky support in the nominating convention. All through the south the Kentucky situation is being watched as a sort of key to the question of whether the effects of the Madison Square Garden controversy in 1924 really have worn off, and whether a tendency towards liberalization is growing in some of the dry areas. The democratic nominee for governor is J. C. W. Beckham, former governor and ex-senator.

Beckham was one of the early drys and stands ace-high with the Anti-Saloon League. He became governor when Governor William Goebel was assassinated in 1900 and it was during his incumbency that the Anti-Saloon League got through county option in place of precinct option.

The republican nominee for governor is Flem D. Sampson, of Barbourville.

Judge Sampson also is dry, but represents a liberalized tendency on some other things. In Kentucky most of the political lights appear to be dry. The governor, the two United States senators, nearly all the members of congress, the two nominees for governor, are dry. So in the campaigning over state offices there virtually was no chance to stir up a wet and dry fight. "Hoss" race gambling was selected as possessing the makings of "the big moral issue."

The Beckham impresarios began assailing the Kentucky Jockey club and soon the state was reverberating with clamor about the domination of the race track interests in government; it became the issue in the primaries of both parties. On the democratic side Robert T. Crowe, a former speaker of the house, had the support of Governor W. J. Fields and James B. Brown, who was a great McAdoo worker four years ago. On the horse racing issue, Crowe was regarded as taking the race track end, while Beckham was the reform entry.

On the republican side, Judge Sampson was opposed by Robert H. Lucas, collector of internal revenue in western Kentucky. Lucas whooped it up for "the big moral issue" and ripped into the race track interests which were painted as dominating the state government.

Judge Sampson, who was regarded as taking the race track end of the republican side, was silent in his platform but denounced subsidized lobbies seeking to control legislation. No organizations were mentioned by name, but as in other states, the Kentucky capitol has plenty of them.

WARM SPRINGS, GA., LURING SOCIETY'S FOLKS AFTER CURE

Southampton, N. Y., September 10.—(AP)—Society folks are likely to flit to Warm Springs, Ga., when they need a cure. At meetings here and at New port descriptions have been given of the beneficial effect of the waters on Franklin D. Roosevelt.

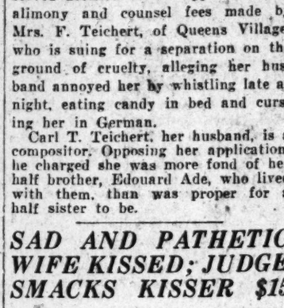

DIVORCE IS ASKED BECAUSE HUSBAND CURSED, ATE CANDY

New York, September 10.—Supreme Court Justice Strong in Brooklyn reserved decision on an application for alimony and counsel fees made by Mrs. F. Teichert, of Queens Village, who is suing for a separation on the ground of cruelty, alleging her husband annoyed her by whistling late at night, eating candy in bed and cursing her in German.

Carl T. Teichert, her husband, is a compositor. Opposing her application, he charged she was more fond of her half brother, Edouard Ade, who lived with them, than was proper for a half sister to be.

SAD AND PATHETIC WIFE KISSED; JUDGE SMACKS KISSER $15

New York, September 10.—When Mrs. Ethel Toney stepped into Morris Sarafettey's employment agency she looked so sad and pathetic because she did not get along with her husband and wanted a job as cook that Sarafettey kissed her by way of consolation. But Mrs. Toney proved unappreciative of his sympathy. She called a policeman and Sarafettey had to pay $15 in court.

BANK OF BELGRADE NOW IN BANKRUPTCY

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—Bankruptcy of the First Agricultural Bank of Belgrade, Jugo-Slavia, which has more than half a million dollars in deposits from America, was reported today to the state department.

Depositors' claims should be presented in Belgrade by October 1, and the state department has authorized the American consul to accept cabled power of attorney from American depositors to file claims.

COOLIDGE SPEEDS TOWARD CAPITAL

President Coolidge's Special Train, En Route to Washington, D. C., September 10.—(AP)—Homeward bound after three months in the west, President Coolidge approached the halfway point in his journey to Washington, tonight, once more traversing the heart of the middlewestern agricultural region of America.

Shortly after dedicating the Lincoln Memorial library at South Dakota State college, he crossed the state boundary line into Minnesota and as night wore on sped through Wisconsin toward Chicago.

There, where east meets west, he turned toward Washington to resume supervision of the government's business Monday.

On all sides of his line of travel, Mr. Coolidge saw evidences of the bountiful harvest that seems destined to reward this section of the country this year. He was carrying away with him the impressions gained from this long stay in the west and a vivid remembrance of real western hospitality which has been extended to him and Mrs. Coolidge throughout their stay.

Romping about the president's private car was a new little chow dog, presented to Mrs. Coolidge just before the special train left Rapid City, which was getting acquainted with the already imposing White House menagerie, consisting of Rob Roy and Diana, white collies, Tiny Tim, another chow, and Rebecca, the president's pet raccoon.

In keeping with the touch of western atmosphere which he has assimilated during his stay in the Black Hills, the president greeted with a smile and a wave of his hands the groups of folks who came to the stations of various cities passed to watch his train go by.

Wherever operating stops were made, both he and Mrs. Coolidge appeared on the back platform to wave and say a word of good-bye to the people of the west. He had notified Governor Zimmerman, of Wisconsin, in response to an invitation that he would appear when his train passed through Madison.

Senator Norbeck, of South Dakota and Mrs. Norbeck, along with some other South Dakota folks said good-bye to the President and Mrs. Coolidge at Brookings, S. D. Just before leaving the senator said a word of appreciation to Mr. Coolidge for the warm praise the president gave Mr. Norbeck in an informal speech yesterday.

Wherever he spoke to people on the trip through South Dakota today, the senator was congratulated for having drawn from the president the statement that he regarded Mr. Norbeck "as one of the great men of the nation."

As the dinner hour came, the president's train approached the Mississippi river and from there it was a seven-hour run to Chicago.

Mr. Coolidge did not plan to make an appearance in that city, the hour being late.

All of tomorrow will be consumed in traveling eastward through Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvana to Washington, but the time schedule has been reversed from that of the westward tip so that many cities passed in the night last June this time will be able to catch a glimpse of the president and Mrs. Coolidge.

On his arrival in Washington, the president expects to confer immediately with members of his cabinet and other government officials in connection with the administration's fall program.

Davis May Make Plea To Coolidge For Flood Funds

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—A second refusal of Comptroller General McCarl to authorize the war department to use $2,000,000 of the 1927 unexpended rivers and harbors appropriation for Mississippi flood relief work may result in an appeal to President Coolidge by Secretary Davis to authorize use of the funds as an emergency relief measure.

Secretary Davis also may submit the problem of finding funds for flood relief to the judge advocate general of the army for a study of legal aspects of the case. The secretary is satisfied that the president would approve any emergency measure that could be made legally.

Federal Funds Available.

Federal funds to repair breaks in the Mississippi are depleted, it was said at the war department, and there are reported to be 250 of these breaks and crevasses still needing repair. Davis wished to transfer the $2,000,000 to the engineer corps for repair work, to be repaid from anticipated appropriations for flood control at the coming session of congress.

The various districts in the flood area are said to be approximately $1,000,000 in arrears in their joint contributions for flood control work. McCarl holds that responsibility for the work does not rest wholly upon the United States, but should be shared by the states.

"This office has fully appreciated the emergency that exists and I regret there is no way in which I may lawfully authorize the needed expenditures," the comptroller general said. "It is understood from the submission that the conditions sought to be relieved by the unauthorized use of the rivers and harbors appropriation has resulted to some extent at least from the fact that the states involved have not complied with the statutory requirements necessary to authorize the use of federal funds provided under the flood control appropriations. It is obvious that the gravity of the situation is for the consideration of the state legislative bodies at least equally with that of the United States."

Part of Government.

The part of the government, he pointed out, was to aid and assist financially in connection with the maintenance and development of the river as a navigable stream only in proportion to the amount made available by such state or subdivision thereof.

"It is a matter conclusively for the consideration of the congress and for determination by the administration office or by this office whether the protection of such private property from floods shall entirely, or to a greater degree than heretofore authorized, also become the responsibility of the federal government."

The ruling was contained in a letter to Secretary Davis in answer to a request for reconsideration of the previous ruling.

McCARL'S DECISION WILL HAMPER WORK.

Memphis, Tenn., September 10.—(AP)—Flood control work in the Mississippi valley received a setback today with the decision of Comptroller General McCarl refusing to divert to the war department a $2,000,000 rivers and harbors appropriation surplus for that purpose.

While the contracts for the closing of crevasse have been let, it was pointed out by Major Donald H. Connolly, United States engineer in charge of the first and second river districts, that had the additional funds become available this work could have been completed sooner. All working time between now and the next flood season is needed in taking precautions against high water, it was explained.

A favorable decision by Mr. McCarl, engineers said, would have enabled them to put in revetment work at places where the caving river banks are getting dangerously close to the levee.

Must Take Chance.

It will be necessary now, in Major Connolly's opinion, to "take a chance" on the caving not progressing fast enough to destroy the levee before there are funds and time for the work.

Word from Vicksburg was to the effect that the ruling would have no effect on the third district as far as actual closing of crevasses was concerned, but it was stated there was a $500,000 shortage for revetment work and unless that is taken care of soon work that should be done immediately to keep the caving banks from becoming dangerous will have to be postponed indefinitely.

No money ever is available at the federal district engineer's office at Louisville for strengthening Mississippi levees or other flood prevention work, and expenditures made during the recent flood emergency still await approval by the war department or by congress. Meanwhile no further money will be spent, engineers said.

MISSISSIPPI CANAL GETS $175,000 FUND

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—The war department has announced allotment of $175,000 for operation and care of the Illinois and Mississippi canal for the fiscal year ending June 30, next. In addition, $43,858 remains from funds previously provided. The new allotment will enable purchase of a new floating plant.

NEW CANDLER HOTEL IN DECATUR WILL OPEN DOORS TO PUBLIC WITH GALA RECEPTION MONDAY NIGHT

MODERN HOSTELRY OF METROPOLITAN TYPE NOW READY

Finest Small City Hotel South of Washington Completed at Cost of $200,000.

A metropolitan hotel of the finest type of modern construction and the latest and most desired appointments will be opened in Decatur Monday night when the Hotel Candler throws wide its hospitable doors to the general public. No small city hotel south of Washington will be more desirable in any of its features nor more adequately fitted to cater to the desires of particular travelers than this hostelry, which has been erected at a cost of $200,000.

Every possible comfort has been provided for the expected guests. Beauty and convenience combine throughout the four stories of the charmingly designed Georgian building. Its many desirable features from cellar to roof will be open for inspection by the general public on Monday night, between the hours of 7 and 12.

A cordial invitation has been extended by the owners and management to all who are interested to attend this brilliant function. Civic and social interests of Decatur will combine to make the event one long to be remembered in the development of the city, for the Candler is strictly a community enterprise, created because of a community need by progressive citizens of the community.

Program of Opening.

An interesting program has been provided for guests of the evening. A reception will be staged in the handsome and commodious lobby lounge between the hours of 7 and 9. Here the guests will be received by Manager and Mrs. S. L. Sloan and a distinguished line of public officials, business and social leaders. During this time a special orchestra, under the leadership of Enrico Leide, conductor of the Atlanta Symphony orchestra, will give a musical program.

After passing the receiving line, the guests will pass to other portions of the structure to inspect the perfect appointments which have been provided for the future guests of the hotel. Under the guidance of special hostesses, parties will be conducted through the spacious dining room, the large kitchen, where meals for hundreds can be prepared without confusion, and finally to the upper floors, where individual guest rooms and larger family suites will be open for inspection to reveal to the public how complete and alluring are the furnishings of this model hostelry.

Refreshments will be served to the guests during the course of the evening.

Dance in Ballroom.

At 9 o'clock the orchestra will desert its post in the lounge and transfer its activities to the ballroom, whose wide expanse of perfectly polished dancing floor will lure those in attendance to join in dances of the hour. This feature of the entertainment will be continued until midnight.

Assisting Mr. and Mrs. Sloan in receiving the guests will be the officers of the Community Hotel Corporation of Decatur, the officers and chairmen of the Decatur Chamber of Commerce, the Decatur Woman's club and the Atlanta Hotel Men's association.

Officials of the hotel company include Walter Candler, J. Howell Green, R. C. Henderson, M. A. Allison, Leon O'Neal, George Woods, C. C. Childress, S. H. Allen, F. H. Robarts, C. H. Blount, W. D. Thompson and J. A. McCrary.

Managers of the hotels of Atlanta will serve as assisting hosts for the Atlanta Hotel Men's association.

Need for Hotel.

The Hotel Candler was built as the result of a need for hotel accommodations in Decatur. Here the junction point of the state's principal highways to the north and east is located, bringing to the city a large number of tourists throughout the year. The educational institutions, for which Decatur is famed, also bring to the city hundreds of visitors during the course of a year, while the normal transient travel is increasingly heavy with each passing year.

Realizing this need a number of leading business men of the city determined to erect a hostelry which should be sufficiently large and adequately equipped to serve the city on the highest possible plane. The idea was sponsored by the chamber of commerce and other institutions. Early in 1927 the movement came to a climax with the organization of an owning company and the sale of stock suffiicent to erect the building.

The Community Hotel Corporation of Decatur resulted, with Walter Candler at its head. An ideal location was secured at the corner of Ponce de Leon and East Church street. Here the Bankhead highway joins the Stone Mountain road, the two carrying the great bulk of all automobile travel, to the north and east of the state. Traffic from Appalachian scenic highway, the roads to Augusta, Monroe and Athens also flow through these arteries. Northbound tourists from these important highways will find in the Candler a refuge convenient to Atlanta without having to thread the unknown mazes of downtown traffic before stopping for the night.

A stock subscription campaign was instituted with the Hockenbury System, of Harrisburg, Pa., in direct charge. The widespread interest in the project was immediately shown by the active participation in the campaign of practically all business and professional men of the city. It is probable that no company's stock in this vicinity is so widely held as that of the Community Hotel corporation.

The Hotel Candler stands today as the completed monument to the effilment of their dreams for a hotel that shall answer every demand of the exacting traveler.

The company was fortunate in choosing as architects the firm of Edwards & Sayward, who are widely known as specialists in hotel and college structures. Their preliminary forts of Decatur's citizens and the fulplans, calling for a building of four stories along classic Georgian lines, finished in drab brick with limestone trimmings was heartily accepted. As the building stands today, framed in its surrounding fringe of graceful elm trees, it is one of the most beautiful buildings in Decatur or the immediate vicinity.

If the exterior is appealing to the eye, the interior is even more so. The first characteristic which strikes the visitor on entering is the ample proportions of the public rooms on the first floor. A huge combination lobby and lounge is entered directly from either Ponce de Leon avenue or Church street. Windows of large proportions pour in a wealth of light and ventilation. The ceilings are high, and the entire room gives a feeling of roominess and spaciousness which is very restful.

The decorations here conspire to enhance the general effect. All decorations throughout the building were installed by the Davison-Paxon company, and the very best decorative talent obtainable has been centered on color schemes, fabrics and furnishings. The effect of light cream tints of the walls are heightened by the heavy red brocaded draperies of the windows with their soft curtains. Two large and striking tapestries cover the rear wall.

The overstuffed furniture of the lounge is neither ornate nor gaudy. The color harmony is maintained through all the numerous handsome pieces. The visitor entering the room is impressed with the quiet, restful tone of the place, which invites to comfort and rest. Along the windows, writing tables in period design are placed.

Office of Hotel.

The desk and office of the hotel is just within the Church street entrance, and guests pass from the register directly to the elevator or stairway. The entrance to the dining room is adjoining.

The dining room itself is one of the features of the Candler. A large room, flanked on two sides by large windows, possessing a high ceiling, it is light, airy and spacious—an ideal place in which to dine. The color scheme of the walls, hangings and other furnishings is the same as for the lounge. The ample proportions of the room give opportunity for arranging the tables with plenty of elbow room. Guests are not oppressed with a sense of stuffiness which is so often met with in public dining places.

The tables and chairs are effective in design. The chairs, which have high, carved backs, have upholstered seats which make for comfort and relaxation. In the center of the room is a handsome table of period design on which rests a large stand lamp with a brilliant shade, and here also are found a wealth of flowers which give character to the entire room.

It is expected that the dining room is to be the most popular of all the Candler's features. In charge of Mrs. S. L. Sloan, particular attention is to be given the preparation and serving of all meals in individual style. It is the plan of Mrs. Sloan to depart entirely from the custom in public restaurants of preparing food in large quantities, without especial seasoning or style. The finest recipes and the best southern traditions are to be maintained in the cooking department to the end that the dining room may become the rendezvous not only of the house guests and residents of Decatur but of Atlantans, as well, who will delight to take the short automobile ride to Decatur so that they may enjoy the true flavor of a southern hospitality for which this section is famous.

Cuisine Equipment.

The pantry and kitchen equipment, which was supplied by the Hotel and Restaurant Supply Co., is ample for every demand that is to be made upon it. Entering this department from the dining room, the waiter passes to the right with soiled dishes and deposits them on the tables of the dishwashing machine, which is of the latest type. Beyond, he encounters a large plate warmer, from which he secures dishes in which his guest's food is to be placed. He then turns to the left along the front of a long cook's table, with its steam warmer and bain marie. Here he receives his food from the chef and goes immediately to the cold service section. Here he obtains salads, drinks and desserts and finds himself back at the entrance to the dining room without confusion.

The cooking section and the cold service preparation departments are similarly arranged to avoid confusion. The range section is made up of gas-heated ranges for baking and frying, large soup boilers and vegetable steamers, and a short-order range for broiling meats or preparing waffles, cakes and other items. Convenient to this section is the cold storage room, where all perishable foods are kept under automatic refrigeration. The butcher shop adjoins and mechanical vegetable peelers, meat slicers and other devices are provided to make the chef's job an easy one.

How thoroughly the kitchen planning has been done was evidenced 10 days ago when the dining room service was inaugurated by serving 100 members of the Masonic debt drive. Although this large number of guests is beyond the maximum which the hotel will normally serve at one sitting, all parts of the service department functioned smoothly, although the regular system had not been started at that time.

Three Upper Stories.

The three upper floors are devoted to 60 guest rooms, 20 to the floor. They are reached by an Otis elevator of the latest type, as well as by service stairs and dumb waiters for handling the work of the housekeeper's division smoothly and without being conspicuous.

On the second floor is located the ballroom. This immense room will prove a joy to those who delight in dancing, for it has a huge floor with a perfect surface, a large number of windows both front and rear to give a constant circulation of air, and dual entrances, both to the hotel and directly to the street level on Ponce de Leon avenue.

The guest rooms are arranged so that a large portion of them can be used en suite. This is particularly true of the corner rooms. Rooms may be had with or without bath, but all have connecting baths. The corner suites have one unusually spacious room which may be used as a sitting room, some of these being equipped with Murphy beds.

While the Candler is designed in all its equipment and service arrangements for a transient hotel, it also will accommodate resident guests. In fact, already a number of guests of this type have taken up their residence for the winter and a number of others will be accommodated. Rates on this type of patronage are very reasonable. As a place of residence for those who desire to live in the suburbs during the winter without the cares of housekeeping, the Candler is ideal, for street cars for Atlanta stop before the door and bus lines in other directions are available.

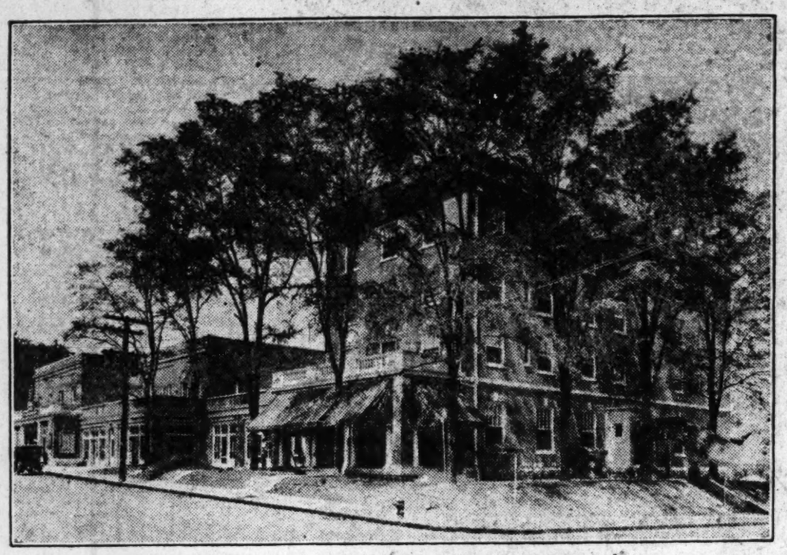

Delightful Setting.

Open terraces surround the hotel, and hammock swings and easy chairs beneath the spreading trees of the terrace prove an alluring place to relax on warm afternoons and evenings. A series of shops adjoin the hotel, and in the same group of buildings is the new DeKalb theater.

A large garage is available for hotel guests immediately adjoining the Candler in the rear. Tourists placing their cars here for the night will be able to have them completely serviced and ready for the next day's journey by the time they are ready to take their departure.

A careful inspection of the Hotel Candler and all its facilities will prove to the public that here is a hostelry that has been planned and equipped with the one thought—of comfort for its guests—in mind. No expense has been spared by those who have financed the big undertaking. Wherever anything has been needed for the proper equipment of the house it has been furnished. With the large tourist trade that is likely to come to it, the Candler's name will soon be known from one end of the country to the other for its excellent hospitality.

DECATUR BANK SERVES DEKALB EFFICIENTLY

The Decatur Bank & Trust company, oldest of Decatur's financial institutions, has been identified with the community's progress since 1906. Chartered August 1 of that year as the Bank of Decatur, it quickly made a place for itself in the business and agricultural life of DeKalb county, and through 21 years has kept pace with the rapid and prosperous development of the district, expanding its facilities in anticipation of the ever-growing demands of its patrons.

For 14 years the institution operated under the original name, but in 1920 the need for trust facilities made amendment of the charter desirable, and since August of that year its business has been conducted under the name of the Decatur Bank & Trust company. At the same time the capitalization was increased from $25,000 to $100,000.

The first officers of the Bank of Decatur were W. F. Pattillo, president; W. H. Weekes, first vice president; W. E. McCalla, second vice president; C. W. Davis, cashier, and J. Howell, Green, attorney. The first loan committee consisted of Mr. Pattillo, Mr. Weekes and Mr. Green, and the two later have served continuously since the institution's doors first opened for business, giving a continuity of management which is rare indeed. Mr. McCalla served the bank for several years as president and afterwards as chairman of the board.

The close of the first day's business showed deposits of only $2,968.42, and in the first year the assets just passed the $54,000 mark. The latest statement showed an aggregate of $1,218,373, of which $100,000 is capital and $76,789.52 is surplus and undivided profits account.

Two years ago in November the Decatur Bank & Trust company opened a new and attractive bank building, equipped throughout in the most modern way and provided with a great fire and burglar-proof vault of the most approved type.

Decatur is essentially a residential community, and its immediate proximity to Atlanta, in combination with excellent transportation facilities, has brought it a steady and substantial growth, its population having practically quadrupled since the bank's establishment.

The Decatur Bank & Trust company serves its community in every commercial banking way. It handles individual checking accounts, pays 4 of deposit; supplies safe deposit, foreign exchange and investment service, and functions in every trust capacity. It provides special facilities for the service and convenience of women patrons. Its various departments are handling some 5,200 accounts.

Officers of the Decatur Bank & Trust company are J. Howell Green, president and trust officer; W. H. Weekes, vice president; S. R. Christie, vice president; C. M. Sanders, cashier; J. W. Battle, assistant cashier. Directors are J. Howell Green, W. H. Weekes, S. R. Christie, Louis Estes, C. A. Matthews, A. R. Almon, C. M. Sanders and J. W. Battle.

SHELDON DAIRIES HAVE HEAVY DEMAND

On the highway to Stone Mountain is located the Sheldon Cooperative Dairies. J. E. Sheldon, owner of the one at this location with interest in the others, has, through love of his work, study and hard labor, built a successful business.

Returning from the war an outdoor life was necessary, the altitude and pure water of this hill alluring, the love of cattle appealing and the need of pure milk essential," Mr. Sheldon said Saturday, in explaining the establishment of the dairies. "Securing a fine Jersey whom we named Aurora Borealis, was secured and the milkyway established. With a surplus of dairy products, our friends were soon being supplied and more Jerseys added. The study of milk and its products, of cows, feeds and sanitation was applied and we were unable to supply the demand. The greatest drawback was to secure dependable help, which was impossible, so we conceived the idea of mechanical help and began to equip with electric motors, rapidly displacing workmen by labor-saving machines.

"The barns are in conformity to regulations of the city—concrete, air, light and running water. These clean, happy, healthy cows, undisturbed by insects, are milked by electric machines and separating and churning are operated by electricity of steam.

"The demand for our products increased, so we became interested in other small dairies to augment our supply, securing an interest in, and the management of them to place their products on the same high scale of merit, we are now able to supply to the most exacting hotel, cafeteria or private home the best grade A raw milk and its products. On the Dr. A. L. Allgood place is being constructed equipment to produce certified milk, which we will soon offer.

"In this way the higher standard is maintained and larger quantities handled, each giving his personal attention and receiving the benefits of the whole by cooperation."

RAMBO FURNISHES LINENS FOR CANDLER

The R. K. Rambo company, wholesale dealers in household linens and cotton goods, furnished the Hotel Candler a good portion of its supplies. This firm has only been in business for three years and its service is supplying hotels and hospitals, large institutions and large consumers the products of southern and eastern cotton mills. It covers practically the entire southeast, it sales being heavy because of the company's geographical advantage and fortunate position of being in both the cotton and manufacturing section.

"There was a time when we raised our cotton here and shipped it 2,000 miles for finishing, but this day is past and in fact some of the best finishers in the world are in the southeast territory," an official of the concern said Saturday. "We raise our cotton, we spin it, weave and bleach in one county. This certainly gives this section advantage in distribution."

The R. K. Rambo company has customers on its books from Washington, D. C., to Denver, Colo. Four men cover the southeastern territory and the company maintains an Asheville office under the management of A. B. Ware, who is known in the hotel and hospital business all over the south.

SECOND BAPTIST MEMBERS TO FETE DR. JONES MONDAY

An immense cake bearing 73 candles will be presented to Dr. Carter Helm Jones, pastor of the Second Baptist church, by his congregation Monday afternoon, climaxing the home-coming day celebration of the 73d anniversary of the church.

At 3 o'clock Monday afternoon a program of speeches, music and religious worship will begin under direction of Mrs. Hal F. Hentz, president of the Woman's Missionary and Benevolent society. This will last until 5 o'clock when a reception for Rev. and Mrs. Jones will begin.

Rev. and Mrs. Jones have recently returned from an extended vacation and the home-coming and 73d anniversary services will be jointly observed.

MASONIC DRIVE DINNER IN DECATUR MONDAY

The second report dinner of the Decatur Masonic Temple campaign to raise $60,000 by the sale of stock in the Pythagoras Masonic Temple association for debt clearance purposes will be held Monday evening in the Decatur Women's club on Ponce de Leon avenue at 7:15 o'clock, when campaign leaders expect and are confident that they will boost the total subscribed to well beyond the $40,000 mark.

Colonel George M. Napier, attorney general for the state of Georgia, a member of Yaarab Temple of Atlanta, and a well-known Mason, will be the principal speaker.

At the first report dinner held on Friday evening in the new Hotel Candler in Decatur $23,495 was reported by the six teams and the special subscriptions committee. The more than 100 enthusiastic workers are striving to exceed that amount in their Monday evening's report. It is pointed out that with both Saturday and Sunday in which to see the members they should reach their goal early in the week.

Captain C. M. Sanders and his workers on Team No. 4 have succeeded so far in retaining the two beautiful silver cups offered to the teams securing the largest number of subscriptions and the greatest amount of money. Captain Sanders reported 40 subscriptions aggregating $4,385 on Friday evening. Captain C. H. Blount, of Team No. 1, was closely trailing with 36 supscriptions for $3,870. Other reports were: Captain Mell Turner, of Team No. 5, 39 subscriptions for $3,690; Captain H. L. Glenny, of Team No. 2, 36 subscriptions for $3,300, and Captain J. J. McConnell, Jr., of Team No. 3, 19 subscriptions for $2,000. The ladies of the Eastern Star, with Mrs. Douglas Lawhon as their captain, reported 24 subscriptions for $1,650. While the quota of the Eastern Star is not as high as that set for the Masonic bodies, they have been more than 100 per cent in results obtained from their prospects.

The special subscriptions committee under the leadership of W. Bayne Gibson include William Alden, A. R. Almon, John Bell, J. L. Bond, Dr. C. E. Buchanan, Scott Candler, George Everitt, W. W. Freeborn, R. C. Henderson, Thomas L. Johnson, Jr., George R. Jones, Dennis Lindsey, W. H. McLaren, W. J. Sayward, Olin M. Stanton, J. T. Sutton, J. C. Tart and John W. Weekes. This committee reported 26 subscriptions for $4,600. It was stated that the awarding of the cups did not include this committee's activities.

The speakers of the evening were Charles D. McKinney, V. O. Kimsey, Dennis Lindsey and J. Howell Green, with Scott Candler, general chairman of the campaign, presiding. The speakers stressed the point that while they had passed the one-third mark of their goal they were just beginning and that it would take the constant, persistent and untiring efforts on the part of all workers to assure success.

"There is still much work to be done. The response by members of the Decatur Masonic and Eastern Star bodies has been in most cases splendid. It will be necessary, however, for the workers to see the prospects who were out of the city when the campaign was launched, or who for some other reason have not been available for solicitation," said Mr. Candler as he urged the workers to strive hard over the week-end.

Mr. Candler further stated that a bronze tablet bearing the names of all the workers in the campaign would be placed in a conspicuous place in the temple to remain as a living evidence that the members of the Decatur Masonic and Eastern Star bodies had really worked to "build the temple" in fact as well as in name.

Blue Ridge May Sell Water and Light Plants To Toccoa Power Firm

Blue Ridge, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The mayor and council of Blue Ridge has passed a resolution authorizing the sale of the electric light and waterworks plants of the city to the Toccoa Electric Power company. The power company submitted a bid of $35,000 for the two plants.

The notice will be published for three weeks and if 20 per cent of the registered voters do not demand a referendum vote the action of the council in accepting the offer of the power company will be final, but if an election is demanded it will be necessary to get a majority of the registered voters to vote for approval, and this majority must constitute two-thirds of those voting in the election.

The power company, in its offer to purchase the plants, has entered into a contract with the city officials whereby it agrees to maintain a standard telephone system, to equip the water plant with an up-to-date filtering system, to be approved by the state board of health, and which will put the city of Blue Ridge in "Class A" as to its water and will also maintain a standard electric distribution system and the same water rates will be maintained and the light rates will be standard and as fixed and approved by the public service commission.

The power company also agrees to expend on improving these public utilities the sum of $40,000, and this amount to be expended within the next 18 months.

If the sale is consummated, the outstanding bonds of the city will be retired and the remainder of the funds will be used with other additional funds to erect a modern high-school building in the city at an approximate cost of $50,000, and it is expected with the opening of the scholastic year of 1929 Blue Ridge will have an accredited high school which will rank with the best in the state.

The work on the construction of the Blue Ridge hydroelectric dam by the Toccoa Electric Power company will be resumed about March 1, 1928, and this development is expected to be completed by December, 1930, it is stated.

BRUNSWICK TO VOTE ON BIG BOND ISSUE

Brunswick, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—A call for a bond election to be held on Wednesday, October 19, has been issued by the Brunswick city commissioners.

This election is to give the voters of the city an opportunity to pass on an issue of $175,000, of which $75,000 is for street paving, $50,000 for an extension of the sewerage system and $50,000 for an annex to the city hospital.

NORTHEAST GEORGIA MAY PLANT TOBACCO

Athens, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Tobacco may be grown in several counties in northeast Georgia as a result of activities by the chamber of commerce here, which sponsored a meeting Thursday of farmers for the purpose of going into the matter. H. L. Fields, of Oglethorpe county, tobacco specialist, who had charge of Oglethorpe county's crop this year, addressed the meeting.

It is said that tobacco can be grown in several counties adjoining Clarke that will grade with the best grown in south Georgia.

The lateness of the Oglethorpe county drop, however, forced some of the growers to sell in south Georgia after the market had ceased to be active. The remainder of the crop was carried to North Carolina, where the market was just opening.

S. L. Sloan Will Direct Destinies of New Hotel

The directors of the Community Hotel company of Decatur have been fortunate in securing the services of S. L. Sloan as manager of the Hotel Candler. Mr. Sloan returns to the Atlanta area with a brilliant record of successful hotel operation back of him during the past three years and will bring to the Candler a thorough knowledge of efficient and effective hotel management which will be of the utmost value to the new institution.

Manager Sloan has been located in Tampa, Fla., during the past three years, where he has been directing the operation of two well-known hostelries of that city, the Cargyle Inn and the Puritan. There he came in contact with a large clientele, drawn from all parts of the United States, and the reputation for hospitality which he established at that time has followed him to Decatur.

The high place which he came to occupy in Florida hotel circles is evidenced by the fact that during his last two years in the west coast metropolis he was elected president of the Tampa Hotel association. Under his leadership the organization made rapid advances in both membership and activity. He also served as a director of the Tampa Board of Trade.

His return to Decatur has been hailed with cordial interest by a large number of friends, for both he and Mrs. Sloan have a wide acquaintance in this vicinity. He formerly was president of the Sloan Paper company of Atlanta, one of the largest wholesale paper houses in this part of the country.

Mrs. Sloan will be actively interested in the direction of Candler activities with her husband. She will have personal charge of the culinary department and all food will be prepared and served under her supervision. She has had wide experience in this type of work and has already scored a success with the meals which she planned and served in Florida.

In the operation of the Candler dining rooms she plans to cater especially to people of Decatur and Atlanta. Dinner and luncheon parties will be served and a special old-fashioned southern menu will always be available to those who desire to have dinner at the Candler while the cook takes her day off.

DOBBS & WEY CO. AIDS IN EQUIPMENT

China, glassware, silverware and aluminum cooking utensils for the Hotel Candler were furnished by Dobbs & Wey company, of Atlanta. The chinaware is of the famous Syracuse brand manufactured by the Onondaga Pottery company, Syracuse, N. Y. The decoration is an original and effective festoon design in black and orange.

Service plates will have a wide apple-green band covering the rim with a gold filagree overlaid. The center of the service plate will display an engraving of Stone mountain in colors. Glassware furnished is manufactured by the Libbey Glass Manufacturing company.

The silverware is made by the International Silver company and the design selected is the "Tremont pattern" in Butler finish. Aluminum kitchen utensils are manufactured by the Wagner Manufacturing company, makers of the finest grade of cast aluminum.

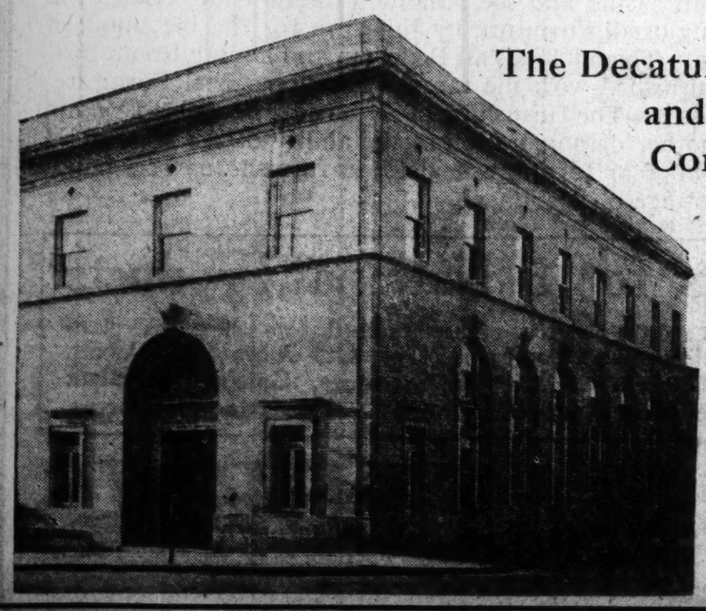

The Dobbs & Wey company is one of the oldest hotel supply houses in the south, having been in business for over 45 years. It has to its credit the equipping of many of the south's finest hotels.

HEARING ON RATES REOPENS TUESDAY

Consideration of a general equalization of southern freight rates on cotton seed products, as proposed before the interstate commerce examiners by large oil refiners and cotton seed shippers, was discontinued Saturday at noon until Tuesday morning. The hearing, in daily session before two examiners sitting with railroad commissioners from North and South Carolina, Georgia and Texas, will likely continue here through the latter part of next week.

The local conference has been devoted to shippers' testimony, as will be subsequent hearings in Memphis, Tenn., September 19, and in Fort Worth, Texas, on October 3. At conclusion of this schedule, each meeting of which is expected to last a fortnight, a program of railroad hearings will be arranged.

Although the past week has been occupied exclusively with testimony from the Southern Cotton Oil company, operators of large plants in Augusta and Savannah from a New Orleans headquarters, next week's renewal of the conference will bring a number of local men before it, among them S. Linthicum, traffic manager of Cotton Seed Crushers' association of Georgia. This organization embraces virtually every independent oil concern in the state.

While the larger shippers, including Proctor and Gamble, Swift and Company and Armour and Company, are seeking a general revision of rates to eliminate alleged discriminations against certain classes of the commodity, the smaller concerns are interested in maintaining rates at their present status, or at least securing them against the possibility of an upward revision, it was said.

Representatives of the Buckeye Cotton Oil company, and the Proctor and Gamble company, both of Cincinnati, will likely be heard the first of next week.

These interests are represented by Attorney John Birchmore, of Chicago. Samuel Herndon, of the traffic department, Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, is also expected to testify.

At the Memphis meeting freight rates in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi will be discussed, in particular with regard to those going to western territories.

Testimony from the carriers can hardly begin before December, says E. M. Price, railroad commissioner of Georgia, who is serving on a joint committee with North and South Carolina commissioners at the present hearing.

Georgia Military Academy To Open Aviation Course

College Park, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Having received student reservations from 22 states and three foreign countries, the Georgia Military academy on September 13 will begin the 28th session of the school's largest enrollment. Preparations are being made to care for more than 400 cadets, the total registration of last year.

Of the 22 teachers employed this year, two are new men on the faculty, Captain Haygood Smith, who is to be in charge of the junior school, and Coach Ray O'Daffer, 12-letter man of the University of Ohio and who for several years since leaving the university has been one of the most successful coaches in the state of Ohio.

When the students arrive on the campus three new improvements will be noted. A new dormitory has been erected to accommodate 100 cadets; a new junior school building and a modernly arranged white-tiled lined swimming pool. The swimming pool is 25 by 75 feet and has a gallery arrangement so that some of the biggest swimming meets of the south may be scheduled for the coming fall.

Captain Robert Rosser, in charge of registration during the illness of Colonel J. C. Woodward, states that all the old students are to matriculate Tuesday and the new students on Wednesday. He also states that the school will open its aviation department of active cadet flying, the school being the only junior military school in the country with such a course offered. Candler field aviators are to be in charge of the actual flying and only students who have parental consent are allowed to enter the department.

MARION COUNTY HIT BY LONG DROUTH

Buena Vista, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The entire area or Marion county is suffering for water, the continued drouth having put many wells dry. The city supply in Buena Vista is badly curtailed.

ED AND AL MATTHEWS EQUIP NEW CANDLER

Guest room and dining room furniture of the Hotel Candler, Decatur's new hostelry, has been installed by Ed and Al Matthews, one of the ranking furniture firms of Atlanta and the south. This equipment contract, one of the largest to be placed in this vicinity recently, follows similar contracts secured by the firm for the Atlanta Athletic club and other important hotels and clubs.

The management of the hotel has taken particular care in selecting the very best of equipment for the Candler. No thought nor money has been spared in making it complete in every respect and up to the highest standards of modern hospitality.

Simmons steel beds have been installed by the Matthews firm in all bedrooms. In connection with these, the famous "Beauty Rest" mattresses of the same brand have been used. Dressing tables, chifforobes and other furniture have been chosen from the firm's extensive stocks, all exceptionally striking in design and durable in workmanship.

In the dining room the furniture was also selected from Matthews' stocks. The chairs were made by Brumby and will appeal to diners not only because of the grace of their design but also for their comfort.

Ed and Al Matthews are Atlanta agents for a number of the most important items of public building and home furnishings. Included in addition to Simmons beds and mattresses, are Sellers Kitchen cabinets, General Electric refrigerators, Atwater Kent radios and Cole's Hot Blast heaters and stoves.

College Park Baptist Church To Entertain At Home-Coming Fete

College Park, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The College Park Baptist church will have a home coming reception next Friday evening. Members of the church will gather for an evening of good fellowship and pleasure. Invitation is also extended to Baptists of the community not members of the church to attend, it is announced.

The church lawn will be lighted where a basket supper with other refreshments will be served. A splendid program of entertainment by local and visiting talent will be rendered during the evening.

Committees in charge of the affair are:

Basket committee, Mrs. H. E. Wall, chairman; Mrs. V. C. Mason, Mrs. W. S. Cantrell, Mrs. T. H. Porch, Mrs. T. E. Fagan, Mrs. W. J. Love, Mrs. G. B. Lindsey, Miss Valera Bennett, Dr. Hoyt Trimble and J. W. Stephenson.

Arrangement committee, Fred Shaefer, chairman; H. E. Wall, R. R. Mason, W. S. Cantrell, Charlie Mitchell and Bob Blankenship.

Program committee, Mrs. L. O. Freeman, chairman; T. H. Porch, Miss Mary Freeman, J. E. Longino, H. L. Tear and Charles Bostwick.

The general reception committee will be composed of the pastor, Rev. L. E. Roberts, the deacons and officers of the Sunday school.

WHITE FIRM GETS HAULING CONTRACT

Cartersville, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Shinall Brothers, of White, this county, have received contracts from the state highway department for the hauling of 15,000 cubic yards of gravel for the project now under way between Kennesaw and Marietta and also for the hauling of gravel for the project from Pine Log camp ground to Fairmount, on the Tennessee road.

STEAMER GIVES ONLY WORD FROM REDFERN

Brunswick, Ga., September 10.—(AP)—The only definite word of Paul Redfern since he hopped off from here August 25 for Brazil indicated that he was clinging to his route and maintaining his schedule as late as the afternoon of the following day, when he was sighted over the Caribbean sea some 165 miles off the coast of Venezuela.

This information, brought back by the Norwegian steamer Christian Krogh, the master of which reported that Redfern circled over the vessel at that point and dropped notes asking the direction of the nearest land, has formed the sole substantial fact that might tend to support the hope of the young aviator's friends and backers here that he had succeeded in landing safely somewhere.

Even the most optimistic believe he must have been forced down in a remote tropical jungle from which he would experience lengthy delay in reaching civilization under the most favorable conditions.

Color to this theory was lent by partially confirmed reports that an unidentified airplane was seen flying over a section of the Orinoco delta of Venezuela on August 27 several hundred miles from his charted route, but the efforts of three South American countries to trace the craft have been unsuccessful.

Plans to make a thorough search of the whole northeastern portion of South America for the missing aviator already have been announced by Richard O. Marsh, tropical explorer, who expects to sail from New York at the head of an expedition soon. Accompanying him will be an uncle of Redfern, who has offered a reward of $1,000 for the discovery of the young flier.

THREE TEACHERS HURT IN WRECK NEAR BAINBRIDGE

Bainbridge, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Miss Mary Davis, of Eufaula, Ala., and Misses Lillian and Lois Wells, of Beuna Vista, all teachers in the Bainbridge city schools, who were in an automobile wreck Friday night coming from Thomasville to Bainbridge when the bus they were traveling in was hit by a small car and turned turtle, are said to be doing well today.

Miss Davis was cut about the head while the Misses Wells were only shaken up. Miss Davis was treated at the Cairo hospital and the party was able to continue the trip to Bainbridge in cars coming this way.

The teachers were en route here for the opening of school Monday.

MISS WILLIE REYNOLDS DIES AT BARNESVILLE

Barnesville, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Miss Willie Reynolds died at her home here Wednesday after a long illness and the funeral and interment were held Friday from the First Methodist church, of which she was a member. Rev. Marvin Franklin, of Atlanta, a former pastor, and Rev. T. J. Branson, present pastor, conducted the services. The interment was in the family lot in the Greenwood cemetery.

Miss Reynolds had been actively identified with the church and social life of the community. She was a first honor graduate of Wesleyan college at Macon and during her college career won numerous medals for her scholastic work.

Miss Reynolds is survived by one brother, Walter Reynolds, of Atlanta, and her aunt, Miss Virginia Holmes, who lived with her.

Judge Believes Flapper Foreruns Age of Decadence

Camden, N. J., September 10.—(United News.)—The cigarette-smoking, scantily dressed flapper is an indication that the world is rushing headlong into decadence such as precipitated the fall of the Roman empire, Common Pleas Judge Henry Burt Ware said today during the arraignment of Paul MacLardy, 33, against whom a serious complaint had been made by Miss Anne Bannerman, 15, after taking a ride in MacLardy's automobile.

Judge Ware imposed a sentence of one year in state prison, but when MacLardy's lawyer pleaded that the girl's attire had tempted his client, the sentence was withdrawn and MacLardy was put on two years' probation. The judge spoke:

"I don't know what the world is coming to. Girls are drinking today who never drank a drop before prohibition. They are not only smoking cigarettes, but are openly indorsing certain brands.

"What little clothes they wear are put on with the sole object of displaying their bodies.

"The Atlantic City beauty pageant, for instance, is nothing but a return to the age of Commodus, when the Roman empire was in the days of its decadence."

FISHING INDUSTRY BRISK AT ST. MARYS

St. Marys, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Notwithstanding the light northeast winds that have prevailed for the past weeks, the shrimp boats and the fishing auxiliary schooners have made daily trips to the fishing grounds and have brought in moderate catches.

TWO MEN KILLED IN RAID ON STILL

Decatur, Ala., September 10.—(AP)—Deputy Sheriff Burns C. Almon and a man named John Jackson were shot to death near here today in a pitched battle which followed a raid by five county officers on four men operating a still.

Jackson, said to have been one of the men at the still, opened fire on the officers led by Sheriff B. E. Davis of Morgan county. The officers returned the fire and Almon and Jackson fell fatally wounded. Deputy Sheriff Willoughby was slightly wounded.

A man named Black was captured by the officers while the other two men escaped, it was said.

SALE BEING CONDUCTED OF EAST POINT LANDS

East Point will be in the midst of a land and subdivision sale on the east side of the town, the event starting Saturday. This division is made up of sixty lots, and is located on East Cleveland avenue, known as Cleveland Heights. The sale is being sponsored by the owners, J. E. LaRoe and L. M. Felton, two well-known real estate dealers. This is the only subdivision known with a horseshoe drive.

HAVANA POSTAL AGENT IN CONFERENCE HERE

J. H. Knox, United States postal agent at Havana, Cuba, is in Atlanta for a conference with officials of the railway mail service following visits to Washington and New York, where he conferred with postoffice authorities. Mr. Knox will leave today for Havana. On his way to Atlanta he spent some time visiting his old home in South Carolina.

FOUR BOUND OVER TO FEDERAL JURY IN LIQUOR CASES

Charged with possession of approximately 15 gallons of liquor, J. M. Bailey, white, and Willie Jones, negro, were bound over to the federal grand jury Saturday by United States Commissioner L. M. Ledbetter. Bond was fixed at $200 each for the defendants. The arrests were made on Peters street by city and federal officers.

Jim Sparoudikis, of LaGrange, was held for the federal grand jury on a warrant charging conspiracy to violate the prohibition law. Bond was fixed at $1,000. Gus Valsamakis is sought in the case, officers said.

Commissioner Ledbetter also held Gussie Strozier, negress, for the grand jury under $200 bond on charges of having 12 gallons of whisky concealed in a trap under the hearthstone in her house.

United States Loses Davis Cup Matches to France

Bill Tilden And Johnston Are Defeated

Tilden Is Powerless After First Two Sets Before Lacoste's Steadiness.

BY HENRY L. FARRELL.

Germantown Cricket Club, Manheim, Pa., September 10.—(United News)—Slow of foot and slack of wind, America's two valiant Bills, Tilden and Johnston, fell before youth here this afternoon and the classic Davis cup for the first time in its long history went to France.

The score, as a matter of record, was three matches to two with the challenging team of young Frenchmen winning from the veteran team of American defenders.

Almost 20,000 spectators gathered in this fashionable club to see what they expected would be a narrow escape by the American veterans but as they left the grounds they saw four smiling young Frenchmen walking out the gate with the cup that had rested contentedly in this country for seven years, emblematic of world's tennis supremacy.

Had Advantage.

Bill Tilden and Bill Johnston, seven years ago, went almost around the world before they returned from Australia with the cup and the same two Bills, valiantly and as bravely as they fought, had to see the same cup pass out of their hands.

When play began this afternoon, the United States had an advantage of two to one with only one match necessary to provide the margin which would keep the cup here for at least another year.

Tilden lost his match to Lacoste at 6-3, 4-6, 6-3 and 6-2 and then the burden of the cup was tossed upon the frail shoulders of Little Bill Johnston.

To keep the cup in the United States, Johnston had to beat Henri Cochet and that he could not do. The stolid young iron man from Lyons went about his business and defeated Little Bill at 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 and 6-4.

The answer was, simply, that both of the American stars were too old.

Tilden Fails.

Tilden opened with some of his old-time fire, but the blaze became embers and finally, in the last few lagging games, merely ashes.

The first two sets were divided and it looked as though Tilden might win. But Lacoste, playing smoothly and depending for points as much on Tilden's

JIM JEFFRIES TELLS HOW REAL FIGHTERS WOULD TRAIN

:: Says Modern Way Is Nothing To Old-Time Method ::

BY C. C. NICOLET.

Chicago, September 10.—A hard swing to the cheek of a golf ball or a fast round with a pate de fois gras may be good training for a gentlemanly boxing convention, but they wouldn't have helped much for a marathon prize fight of another day, Jim Jeffries, former heavyweight champion of the world, said today.

Training is 90 per cent of a prize fight, and if Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney are training—well, although Jeffries hadn't seen either one work out and didn't like to take hearsay evidence as fact, he plainly had his doubts.

"Maybe you can make prize fighting a social sport and a polite profession, but I don't see how," he said, nursing his califlower ear—one of the oldest cauliflower ears in the industry.

Outlines Training.

Jeffries outlined his training program for his fights with Fitzsimmons, Johnson and the others. It contrasted strangely with the so-called grind of Dempsey and Tunney at their luxurious quarters at Lincoln Fields and Lake Villa, respectively.

Dempsey, on the days when he has not used up his energies to fishing and rest, has done five to seven miles of road work, three minutes and some times six with the punching bag, an equal period skipping rope, and three to seven rounds with sparring partners.

Tunney has boxed only four days since he arrived in Chicago, six rounds each day. His road work and gymnasium training corresponded to Dempsey's.

Both have golfed a good deal, and Tunney has dined twice at the suburban home of wealthy friends.

A typical day in Jeffries' camp in his training periods, as outlined today, included:

Half a dozen 25 to 100-yard sprints before breakfast.

Eight to 12 miles of road work—"and I ran, too—it was real road work."

Three games of handball.

Rope jumping—1,500 to 3,000 times without a break.

Twenty minutes of bag punching without a break.

Twelve to 16 rounds with three or four sparring partners—"and it was fighting not boxing. They put out everything they had and hit to hurt."

Real Fighting.

He ate sparingly of solid food, drank no tea or coffee and drank one glass of water a day, just before he retired.

"It took a month to get into condition for that kind of training," said Jeff, "but when it was over, I could stand anything. Hard blows didn't hurt, and I could keep up a fast pace for round after round."

Jeff trained three months on that schedule before his fight with Fitzsimmons, and had put in five months or partial training before that.

Jeffries also had his doubts about the advisability of using training quarters designed for millionaires.

"Soft surroundings make you soft," he said. "The farther away from nature anybody gets, the worse off he is. Mountains are the best place to train."

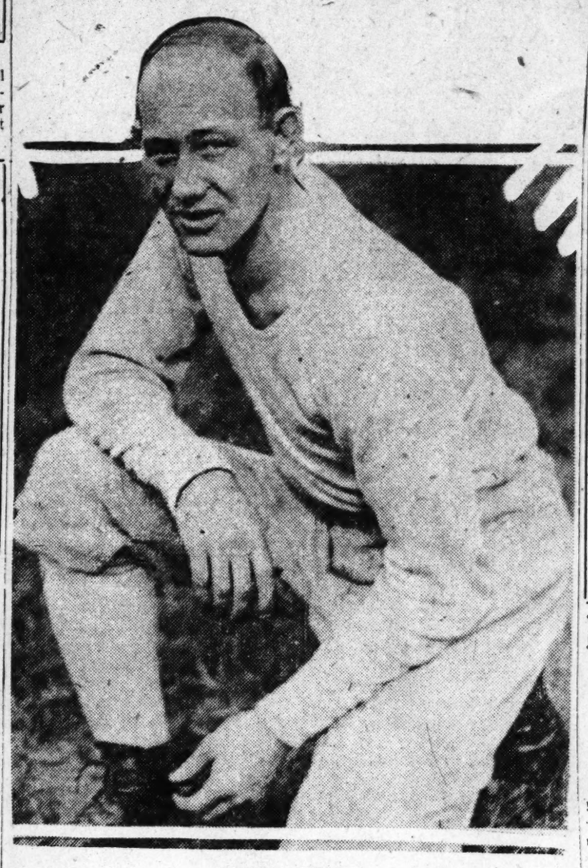

Know Your Jackets Will Start Today

"Know Your Jackets." That statement has nothing to do with the trend of styles in 1927 nor has it anything to do with any article of wearing apparel. It is just the name of a feature, compiled by Ben Cothran, member of The Constitution sports staff for the purpose of introducing all the members of the Tech football squad to the readers. On another page of this section will be found a picture of Ed Crowley, captain of the Tech squad, with a descriptive piece. This is the first of a daily series to be found in The Constitution during the next few weeks.

2 Vols Are Sold To Major Leagues

Nashville, Tenn., September 10.—(AP)—Two of the Nashville Vols will not return to the team next spring, Manager James Hamilton having announced that both will go to the American League. Douglas ("Hoco") Taitt will be with the Boston Red Sox and Eddie Phillips with the Detroit Tigers. Neither will report until next spring.

Henry Bror Bjorkman, who spends a few busy hours every afternoon during football season at Tech flats coaching the varsity ends, training the much-abused "Red Devils" to butt the varsity lines to pieces—if possible—and otherwise assisting Coach W. A. Alexanler in his task of making a football team out of three-score bruisers, will write football for The Constitution during the coming season.

This is not merely the announcement of another feature to The Constitution stock. It is the announcement of the greatest football feature of the season for Atlanta.

BLACKFEET INDIANS MAKE DEMPSEY "HEAP BIG CHIEF"

:: Flynn Is Dubbed "Chief Bushwah" by Gang at Camp ::

Lincoln Field, Crete, Ills., September 10.—(AP)—Just as a bolt of lightning ripped across the Lincoln fields race track and a clap of thunder shook the stands, Jack Dempsey today settled the feathered head-piece of the Blackfeet Indians on his brow and became "Thunder Chief" of the Pikuni tribe from the Glacier Park reservation.

Twenty-seven Indians, headed by Chief Two-Guns-White-Calf, who posed for the head on the buffalo nickel, joined in the dance about the former heavyweight champion while the leader solemnly girded Dempsey's bronzed throat with a necklace of eagle claws and chanted the glories of the new tribal chieftain "a powerful bird who flies high."

Notables Present.

Dempsey, who claims that blood of the Utah Cherokees flows in his veins, then joined the war dance, mixing the ceremony a bit at times to do a little shadow boxing. Tex Rickard, promoter; Jim Jeffries, heavyweight champion of other decades; Dempsey's wife, Estelle Taylor, and Mrs. Rickard witnessed the ceremony.

Somewhere in the excitement Leo P. Flynn, manager of the former titleholder, was forgotten in the ceremonies. The camp followers immediately organized a rival coronation and with fitting ceremony and a trick nightcap, dubbed the "silver fox" "Chief Bushwah" of the Providence, (R. I.) reservation.

The Indians looked on and scowled.

Delays Training.

The Indian ceremonial delayed Dempsey's training until late in the afternoon when the crowd that witnessed the coronations had departed. Jack worked out for seven rounds, boxing four after single sessions at the light and heavy bags and shadow exercise.

Although the session was brief, Dempsey appeared much faster today than in his last two workouts Thursday. His punches were short and well-timed and he had little trouble weaving and bobbing away from the educated left hands of Gans and Till.

Reeves To Help Clay Coach At Tech

Bobby Reeves, Georgia Tech product, and now star shortfielder of the Washington Senators, will aid Kid Clay in coaching the Tech baseball team next spring, it was announced at Tech Saturday afternoon.

Bobby aided Kid in the same manner last spring, and gave some valuable assistance. Since breaking into major league baseball, Bob has literally set the world on fire, and is being acclaimed as one of the best shortfielders baseball has seen.

A new sport writer recently said that Bobby had the best throwing arm of any shortstop in baseball today, and before he got through would take his place alongside the great shortstops of all time.

Brownlee Wins Over Bill Manley

Wes Brownlee, former welterweight wrestling champion, defeated Bill Manley, well-known amateur grappler in the opener of the wrestling season at the Y. M. C. A. Saturday night.

Brownlee won the first fall after 27 minutes of fast and furious grappling. With three minutes to go, both came out of their corners determined to take the fall. Brownlee won the fall and the match in 2 minutes and 30 seconds.

Another feature of the program was the bout between Bayard Evans, wrestling coach at the "Y," and Bob Lentz, formerly of Miami. The event was well attended by local mat fans.

Tigers Buy Players.

Detroit, September 10.—(AP)—The purchase of five minor league players was announced today by the Detroit baseball club. All will report at the next spring training camp. They are W. J. Sweeney, first baseman; Nolan Richardson, third baseman; Charles Sullivan, pitcher, and R. C. Holland, outfielder, from the Fort Worth club of the Texas league, and E. Phillips, pitcher, of the Nashville team of the Southern association.

Tilden's Legs Caused Loss, Says Richards

"Big Bill" Unable To Come to Net With Enough Speed.

BY VINCENT RICHARDS.

Champion and Former Davis Cup Player.

(Special Dispatch to the Constitution and North American Newspaper Alliance.)

(Copyright, 1927, in all Countries by North American Alliance.)

Germantown Cricket Club, Philadelphia, September 10.—America's long supremacy on the tennis courts has been broken. After seven years in which William Tilden and William Johnston turned back every determined attack on the part of the French players, they finally succumbed here this afternoon before the magnificent playing of Rene LaCoste and Henri Cochet . . . Curiously enough both "Bill's" went down to defeat in four sets. LaCoste beat Tilden at 6-3, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2, and Cochet taking the measure of Johnston at 6-3, 4-6, 6-2, 6-4.

Although Johnston's defeat was more or less looked for, few thought that Tilden on the form he has been displaying the last few days would lose to LaCoste. Two things were responsible for Tilden's unexpected defeat. First and foremost was the ability of the French star to take Tilden's burning drives and send them back with a slow tantalizing slice. Usually those returns found the baseline. Second, was Tilden's inability to come in to the net on his forcing drives. LaCoste is a veritable stonewall and for any player in the world to try to beat him from the back of the court is madness.

Legs Weakening.

After the lanky Philadelphian had lost the third set curiousity got the better of me, and I went to Tilden's dressing room to find out why he did not come in to the net on his forcing shots. His answer to the question was simple, sincere and frank. He informed me it was a question of legs, after his terrific matches on Thursday and Friday he could not muster the necessary pep to rush the net at the right time.

It was very noticeable, however, when Tilden did come in for a crisp volley he usually won the point. But when one thinks of the vast amount of energy that Tilden expended during the last few days we certainly can be pardoned for his remaining on the baseline today. The general play of LaCoste was superb, but I

Scrimmage To Get Under Way at Tech Flats This Week

Gridmen Face Hard Period Of Practice

Bill Fincher Well Pleased With Line Prospects for Coming Season.

BY BEN COTHRAN.

Those collegiate young gentlemen who include football in their course of study at the Georgia School of Technology, Saturday finished their first week of practice for the forthcoming season, which opens some three weeks, more or less, from this date.

During that first week, the young men puffed and toiled under a blazing sun, working on fundamentals ad getting themselves in physical condition for the harder work which is beginning this week. Work is something that a football player is introduced to early in the season, and is something that he does all of the time. And the work can be stated in the word scrimmage.

Scrimmage for the Techmen starts some time this week, and once started there will be plenty of it. In fact, scrimmage will probably take place every day or so with every man getting about five before the season opens.

Very little, if any, can be told of a team before the first scrimmage, but even in the face of that, one fact has developed at the flats during the past week. Bill Fincher, if injuries leave him alone, is going to have a better line than most people think.

Fincher Likes Prospects.

Bill himself has said, "If I don't have any injuries, I'll be more than pleased with my line this year, and I'm hard to please." Those words, coming from Mr. Fincher, sound good, for Bill is inclined to look upon every and all things with a rather baleful glance.

This line will be fairly heavy, but not full of clumsy, 220-pound giant killers. Papa Hood is the heaviest man, weighing something over 200. The guards, Drennon and Firpo Martin, are short, stockily built and active, which is just as guards should be. Peter Pund had experience last year when Owen Poole was forced out of several games, and is fully able to take care of center. As to the other tackle, there are any number of likely candidates for that position, and the season will probably see Thrash, a reserve of last year, and Coot Watkins alternating in the games. Coot is just up from the freshman team, but he is big, active and has the one quality that is Bill Fincher's mind makes a lineman—fight.

Then Bill has a reserve, Frank Spear, another freshman tackle, John Lillard, a husky reserve who can play at either guard or tackle; Joe Westbrook, a guard, and Rusk and Keener to call on in case Pund is unable to play.

There are numerous scrubs and others making a bid for line positions, and they show promise. Therefore you can hardly blame Bill for waxing somewhat enthusiastic over his prospects.

Ends in Bad Way.

The ends are far from being up to standard if they are to hold up with the rest of the team. Captain Ed Crowley is the best of the lot, and is the only one that can be depended upon to perform as Hank Bjorkman could wish. Then there are Glenn Holland, a reserve who has had little varsity experience, and Hecke, a sophomore who, at best, can be rated as fair. Of course, it's early in the season, but the problem of end is going to cause Bjorkman much worry before the season is out.

More can be said about the backfield after there have been one or two scrimmages. The backs are many, they are fast and they are active. A number of the reserves have put on weight since last year, which should help matters. Of course, a light fast backfield is okay, but a little weight goes a long way sometimes. The first week brought out one thing. Tech's attack will be more varied than it has in the past. There will be plenty of passing, a good deal of deception and running of the ends.

Parham, Durant and Smith are there to do the passing; Parham and Oltz can take care of the punting, and there isn't enough space to name all those who can tote the ball for gains. Don Miller has enough good material on hand to fill up four or five backfields and there probably won't be anything like a regular backfield at Tech this year. For one thing, there isn't an outstanding man around whom the attack will be built which will cause a larger variety of plays and using a larger number of backs in each game.

"SIGNALS---AND OTHER FOOTBALL EXPRESSIONS"

They're back again. The young gentlemen with padded shoulders, who wear cleated shoes, and spend their afternoons chasing a football up and down a field 100 yards long. The young gentlemen pictured above spend their time in that manner out on Grant field, and from all indications, their time is being well spent. Bob Parham, whose educated toe has attracted much attention, is giving said toe a workout at the upper left. The young fellow with the ball, coming directly towards you, is Shorty Smith, one of a number of fleet backs who will wear the gold jersey of Georgia Tech this year. At the lower right are the boys upon whom will fall the honor of occupying guard positions in Tech's line, Raleigh Drennon, left, and Firpo Martin. The scene at the top is a portion of the squad going through the daily lesson in turf gymnastics directed by Don Miller.

Walter Hagen Wins Western Open Tourney

Records Fall as Pro Champ Battles Way to Title.

Chicago, September 10.—(United Press.)—Walter Hagen won the 1927 western open golf championship today for the fourth time in 11 years.

Hagen shot two rounds on the No. 4 Olympia fields course in 69 and 75, giving him a total of 281 for the 72 holes. He previously had scored 70-67, the latter score being a new record for the difficult No. 1, par 72, course.

To win, Hagen beat as fine a field of golfers as ever entered a western open. His brilliant 67 and 69 allowed him to let up in his last round.

Four times in the last 18 he approached over the pin, preferring to go down above par rather than take a chance on the sand traps in front of the greens.

Plays Smart Golf.

Hagen never played smarter golf. He knew a 75 would give him the championship and he played for a 75. Several times his drives placed him in a position to try for birdies but he shot safely. There was never a stroke that gave the ball a chance for a difficult lie.

Hagen also won the title in 1916, 1921 and 1926. His record for the event is 278, made in Cleveland in 1921. Last year he scored 279 to win at Indianapolis.

Two of the country's leading golfers went into a tie for the runner-up position to Hagen. Both Al Espinosa, Chicago, and William Mehlhorn, New York, scored 285.

Laurie Ayton, Chicago, took third place with 286. He had a brilliant 68 and a good 71 on the last two rounds. A starting 75 ruined Ayton's chances for second place. He scored 72 on his second round.

Evans Leads Amateurs.

Chick Evans, Chicago, led the amateurs with a 292. Chick went into the last round in second place with 215, but a 77 on the final 18 holes forced him down below the professionals.

Though he finished well down, Evans carried probably the largest gallery of the tournament in his final round.

Eddie Held, St. Louis, and Rudolph Knepper, Chicago, tied for second place among the amateurs with 297. Held, on his second round, turned in a sensational 69 over the par 72 on No. 4 course.

Hagen won $500 as first prize of the tournament.

South Ga. A. & M. Ready For Opener

Tifton, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The South Georgia A. M. college football team will open the season on the home grounds Wednesday, September 21 with the Douglas "Aggies." The local warriors are working hard under Coach Ozion Mitchell for the opener and from all reports it will be a hard fought game for both parties concerned.

J. J. WOODSIDE WINS SHOOT AT PEACHTREE

John Woodside won the singles at the weekly shoot of the Peachtree Gun club, which was attended by 18 crack shots of Atlanta. The singles were decided on 50 targets with added birds. The victory gave Woodside the cup offered each week at this club.

C. M. LeRoux won the cup on the 25 yardage handicap. His score of 22 out of a possible 25 tied the mark made by R. S. Pringle, J. R. Gray and Sam DuBose. In the shootoff LeRoux won by the count of 24 out of 25. Dr. W. W. Yankey won the doubles with the splendid score of 22 out of 12 pair. J. R. Gray turned in a score of 49 out of a possible 50 in the singles, which was the best score of the day.

The scores follow:

J. R. Gray, 49; J. B. Seales, 47; John Woodside, 48; Dr. F. Stanbach, 44; C. M. LeRoux, 42; R. S. Pringle, 41; Sam DuBose, 40; Palmer Blackburn, 39; J. S. Jones, 38; Marion Smith, 37; Line Wright, 35c.

Out of a Possible 25.

M. C. Seaburn, 23; J. M. Coles, 22; J. M. Hawkins, 22; H. Scott, 20; Lon Davis, 20; Dr. M. Sims, 19; V. Hornsby, 18; A. A. Stovall, 18.

Doubles, 12 Pair.

Dr. W. E. Yankey, 22; John Woodside, 20; C. M. LeRoux, 20; J. R. Gray, 19; Lon Davis, 19; Sam DuBose, 18; Dr. C. C. Howard, 17; J. M. Hawkins, 16; J. M. Coles, 15; Dr. M. Sims, 14.

25 Handicap Targets.

Dick Gray, 22; Sam DuBose, 22; R. S. Pringle, 22; C. M. LeRoux, 22; Dr. F. Stanbach, 21; John Woodside, 21; J. Seales, 20; P. Blackburn, 20; M. Smith, 20.

Heavy Line, Light Backs at Citadel

Charleston, S. C., September 10.—Coach Carl Prause began the second week of practice at the Citadel with his chief attention being paid towards developing a backfield combination that will be able to perform with some degree of consistency during the coming weeks. There is but a short time before the first game with Davidson at Gastonia, N. C., on September 24 and more than the ordinary amount of preliminary work has to be done if a half-way showing offensively is to be made against the Wildcats.

A heavy line with a bunch of lightweight backs seems to be the outlook for the Cadets in their first games at least until more experienced heavy men can be developed.

Waner Brothers Vs. Ruth-Lou

It would afford one of the most colorful contrasts in baseball history if the Pirates, with the Waners, meet the Yankee combination of Ruth and Gehrig in the world's series.

TECH SQUAD IS IN SHAPE TO PLAY NOW, SAYS STATON

:: Speed Will Be Keynote of Jacket Offense This Year ::

BY JOHN STATON.

Roy Gore III, mascot of the Tech football team, came home the other night and refused a large piece of luscious lemon pie. "You see, it's this way, mommer," he explained, "We've gone into training out at the flats now and I can't eat any more sweets."

Roy (who is about eight) and the rest of the boys have settled down to the more serious aspects of the grind as each day brings them a little nearer to the opening of the season.

Labor day was a big afternoon on Grant field. Coach Alex met the candidates, gave them a talk, and then went through some limbering up exercises. Each succeeding day coach has given the men a little more to think about, a little more to do.

The past spring football practice was invaluable, for it has enabled Coach Alex to push his men into fair form in a single week. Plays and formations which were rehearsed last spring have been revived in a single afternoon.

But a scant six days have elapsed since the coach officially met his men on the field. Yet, in a pinch, Tech could play a game on Wednesday of this week and make a creditable showing. Some time next week there will be a scrimmage—a hard one, too. Both teams will have a variety of plays; both teams will be in excellent physical condition.

With any kind of weather, the potential varsity team should get five full scrimmages before the opening of the season on October 1. There will be one next week, and two each of the two weeks following.

A scrimmage is a great instrument for proving a man. If he has the stuff, he will show up well, even when apparently there is nothing at stake. But if a man is lazy, indolent, or yellow, there is nothing like a scrimmage to bring out those qualities.

Just now, there are several men who have equal opportunity to step inside the charmed circle and be classed as "regulars." Those five scrimmages will eliminate some and benefit others. In some of its aspects, football is a game of the survival of the fittest.

Just at this juncture it is well to mention that alumni of Tech should bring with them to the field some means of identification, such as an alumni card, which may be obtained from the secretary. The field is policed by students who are under orders to ask from the field all who are not entitled to be there. These students do not know one man from another and unless the alumnus has some means of establishing that fact the student inspectors must carry out their instructions.

Speed Is Keynote.

The motif of the Tech attack this fall will no doubt be speed. This will in turn call for quick opening plays, flashy end runs, and several bags of tricks. The pile-drivers of yore are not to be seen. There is not a Harlan or a Wycoff who can ram a hole where there is none, who by brute strength and powerful drive can rip through the opposing primary defense for yardage.

But there are several men in the backfield who can run with Barron, others who can rival Flowers in foot movement, and Ferst, in the knack of squeezing through the tiniest hole.

That seems to indicate that the Tech play this fall will be more spectacular than in many years preceding. Since 1920, probably Tech's greatest strength, year in and year out, was her ability to ram any line. The Tech lines have been big and rangy, the backfields have always boasted of at least one plunger.

And, in the main, Tech has relied on her line-plunging attack. End runs and passes were used in order to spread out the defense so that the line plays would go better.

Line Play.

This year line plays will no doubt be used to crowd in the defense so that the end runs and passes will go better. The spectators are due to get many a thrill from a sweeping end run, from a brilliant bit of broken-field running, or from a cleverly executed forward pass. The Tech style this season, following the general trend, will be more open than ever before.

So, in still another aspect it is going to be a crucial year for Tech. First, Tech changes the style of play by eliminating the jump shift; second, Tech will no doubt change the character of play from mass attack to open work; will exchange the buldgeon for the sword.

Back in the olden days there was a Strupper who made them gasp by his open-field running, by his sheer speed in outdistancing his opponents on a long end run. Today there is no Strupper. But there is a Parham, a Horn, a Smith, a Mizell, a Reed and many others. Who can tell, but ere this season closes the names of these men will not be as brilliantly emblazoned in permanent lettering as is the name of Strupper?

N. C. State Coach Hurt in Practice

Raleigh, N. C., September 10.—(AP)—Head Coach Gus Tebell, of State college, while drilling the football squad, suffered a broken bone in his ankle as the first casualty was chalked up today in the Wolfpack training season.

MARINES LOOK FOR GOOD GRID TEAM IN 1927

Quantico, Va., September 11.—(Special.)—Facing a stiff and fast schedule, which will take them over all of the east this fall, the Quantico Marines started training this week at the University of Maryland. This gives the squad a little over three weeks' training prior to the opening game with Washington at Quantico October 1.

Forty-five officers and men have reported this season, and, although transfers, discharges and eligibility rules have played havoc with last year's team, there is a wealth of new material for Coach Keady to work on in shaping this year's squad.

The greatest loss was sustained in the backfield with Levey, Pugh, McQuade and Rykeman gone, while the linesmen who will not be available are Hough, Bailey and Wigmore. It is felt, however, that with such veterans as Arnold, Buckowy, Thompson, Dahlgren, Duncan, Whitfield and Shunway, Coach Keady will have a strong nucleus to build around.

Two new men who will no doubt find regular berths behind the line are Alan Shapley and Bob McDowell. The former has just been commissioned from Annapolis, where he starred with the midshipmen, while the latter comes highly touted from the University of Southern California. Frank Dailey, who played with Nebraska last year, should also make the grade.

The array of linesmen this year will be broughtened by the reappearance of Sol Levinsky, familiar to Marine fans as one of the outstanding guards of former years. For the wing positions there will be Whitfield and Clements, both regulars from last year.

Arnold and Dahlgren, both from last year's squad, are out again for a quarterback berth and will no doubt be alternated in games as they were last year. Another addition of note to the new material is McCracken, who is considered one of the best players ever developed on the Parris Island team.

Stars, Mayors Buy Fight Tickets

Chicago, September 10.—(AP)—A partial list of ticket purchasers for the Tunney-Dempsey fight made public revealed the destination of some several thousand choice tickets.

Movie actors have a block of 200; Mayor Thompson and Governor Small have blocks of 600 each, and the Illinois Athletic club has a block of 1,200.

Twenty-five hundred tickets have gone to the South Park board, which controls Soldier field, where the fight is to take place September 22. The Madison Square Garden club, New York, has purchased 1,200, while James Carey, Rochester, N. Y., has been allotted 270.

Black Beats Ansley for City Golf Championship

Champ Wins 2 Up To Cop 1927 Crown

Last Few Holes of Final Match Replete With Thrills.

BY WHITNER CARY.

Charlie Black, Jr., a player who has been knocking on golf's throne room door on several occasions this summer, crashed through the last barrier to championship honors Saturday over the Capital City club course when he defeated Harry Ansley 2 up in the final round of the city championship.

To describe that 36-hole journey that finally led Charlie to the championship seat is to describe 18 holes of rather mediocre golf in the morning rounds, 15 holes of exceedingly mediocre golf during the afternoon round and then three holes of as exciting and thrilling golf as a city championship has ever witnessed. And it was those last three holes, played under a terrific strain, that lifted that final match from the realms of the commonplace to a seat among aristocratic golfing encounters. For after all, golf is a game that requires cool nerve as one of the leading factors and there was more than a plentiful supply of that commodity flashed by those two struggling players during those last three nerve-torturing holes.

Spotty Golf.

The golf up to that time may have been extremely spotty. At times it was very poor. But this early exhibition simply set a stage for a close finish in which the golf of both contestants rose to the highest pitch of the day.

And it was a finish worthy of a city championship. After leading Ansley two up at the lunch hour, Black set sail on that last 18-hole trail with a brand of golf that, while not the best Charlie has produced during the tournament, was good enough to overshadow that of Ansley to increase his lead to four up as they stood on the seventh tee. During this six-hole journey Ansley had missed several opportunities on the greens. In fact, save during the concluding part of those 18 holes, it was the traitorous work of his putter that gave his opponent the advantage. During the afternoon round Ansley had no less than five three-putt greens and in each case that one extra putt either lost him the hole or prevented him from a win.

With a four-up lead at the seventh tee, Black looked as good as under the wire a winner. But right here Charlie made his first serious miscue of the afternoon round. His second shot left him a short approach to the green and he followed with a bold pitch that raced over the green and down the opposite slope into real trouble. He failed to get out on his first attempt and when his second try sent his ball to the far edge of the green he conceded the hole. They halved the eighth, although Ansley had a fine opportunity to win it. His tee shot, one of the best he made during the day, landed on the carpet, but again three putts were required to get him down.

Lead Cut in Half.

The ninth hole saw Black catch the three-putt habit and catch it in no unmistakable manner. His approach putt left him a scant foot from the hole. The sinking of that 12-inch affair would give him a half. He promptly missed it and his big four-up lead had been cut in half.

The missing of that short putt seemed to bother Charlie no little, with the result that after halving the 10th, he took three putts on the short 11th. This misdeed cost him the hole, as Ansley was down in par figures. They halved the next two with Ansley taking three putts on the 12th and Black saving his skin on the 13th by a masterful approach.

Then came the 15th and a win for Ansley, which squared the match. Charlie's second was short and he took three more to get down, while Ansley, who was also short, pulled of a very fine chip shot, which enabled him to get down in one putt.

The two players went to the 16th tee with the match square and but three holes left to play. And right there on that 16th fairway Charlie Black broke open the lock to the throne room of champions. It was his No. 2 iron that played locksmith and played it in a fashion that will long be remembered by the large gallery that followed the match.

Mental Hazard.

Now it is an old maxim in golf that the hardest mental hazard to overcome is to have a big lead slowly but surely creep away. Picture in your mind, therefore, the mental torture that must have been Charlie's as he stood on that 16th tee and gazed down that seemingly endless fairway that yawns before ones eyes on this particular hole. Here he was square when only a short time before he had been basking in a four-up lead.

They drove. Ansley's ball found the rough to the left, while Black's tee shot, although not quite as far, split the fairway. It was therefore his shot. And right there Charlie Black faced the biggest ordeal in the entire match. There were two lanes open for him. He could play safe and in all probability get a half, or he could go boldly for the green and risk winning or losing that hole and for all he knew the match on one heroic effort. Added to this terrible strain was the memory of that tremendous lead now cut away.

Crack! It was his trusty number two iron meeting that ball. And with that crack went the answer to his problem. And when that little white pill rolled onto that far away green the answer as to who would win that match was announced. True, Ansley made a noble effort with his spoon to get home and in fact did make a very fine shot from the tall grass. But the ball landed too far from the cup to get down in two putts and Black went one up.

More Thrills.

But drama and thrills were only starting. Coming to the 17th Ansley's second was to the left of the green, while Blacks' approach was within eight feet of the cup. Faced with being one down Ansley realized that to continue in the match he had to halve that hole. His chip was a piece of art and the ball came to rest seven feet from the cup. Black missed his eight footer by inches and then amid the silence of death Ansley ran that seven footer home. When that seven footer, made under that strain, clinked in the bottom of the can a lot of those previous poor putts were forgiven and forgotten, while opposite the name of Harry Ansley went the citation—he has nerve under pressure.

Came the 18th, more torture for both spectators and players and the dramatic conclusion of the 36-hole grind. Both were slightly off the green with their tee shots with Black away, but with Ansley having to either pitch or run over a slight mound at the edge of the green. Black, showing splendid nerve in the face of the gruelling test, sent his effort to within three feet of the hole. It was then up to Harry to do or die in one last desperate attempt. His chip was played to within four feet of the hole, but directly behind his opponent's ball. His parting salute was a glorious attempt to pitch over Black's ball. The effort rimmed the cup and was followed by Black sinking his for a win of the hole.

Other Good Matches.

While the championship match naturally carried the center of interest, the lower flights resulted in some heated play. Chief among these battles was the 23-hole second flight engagement between Tom Shropshire and Charlie Nunnally. Nunnally finally won.

Another extra hole affair was the 18-hole third-round battle between Chick Ridley and Dave Black. Both players put two drives out of bounds from the 19th tee. Chick finally won the hole and match.

The tournament was a great success. A large part of the credit for this is due to the very efficient way in which the affair was run. R. H. Martin, chairman of the tournament committee, ably assisted by Captain Lloyd Parks, Milton Dargan and others, ran the matches off with clocklike regularity and in the play that followed not a hitch occurred to keep the event from being the best city tournament in the history of Atlanta.

Championship Flight—Charlie Black defeated Harry Ansley, 2 up.
Second Flight—Charles Nunnally defeated Tom Shropshire, 1 up, 23 holes.
Third Flight—Chick Ridley defeated Dave Black, 1 up, 19 holes.
Fourth Flight—Scott Hudson, Jr., defeated Jim Williams, 1 up.
Fifth Flight—Hugh Adams defeated Arch Martin, 4-3.
Sixth Flight—P. A. Duke defeated Tom Brown, 3-2.
Seventh Flight—Alfred Floyd defeated Al Martin, 2-1.
Eighth Flight—John Lyle defeated Charlie Black, Sr., 5-4.
Ninth Flight—Clyde Dudley defeated F. Holleman, 1 up, 19 holes.
Tenth Flight—J. N. Brawner defeated F. Rose by default.
First Flight Consolation—T. R. Garlington defeated Lee Fowler, 5-4.
Second Flight Consolation — Berrien Moore, Jr., defeated John Westmoreland, 2-1.
Third Flight Consolation—Lloyd Parks defeated John Willis, 3-2.
Fourth Flight Consolation — Luke Everett defeated James Davis, 1 up.
Fifth Flight Consolation—O. S. Coe defeated E. W. Gottenstraeter, 5-4.

In the upper left is Charlie Black, Jr., the new city golf champion. Charlie went through the best field ever assembled in this event and topped off his brilliant play of the week by beating Harry Ansley 2 up in the final round played Saturday over the Capital City club course. The smiling individual at the upper right is Harry Ansley, who forced Black to go to the thirty-sixth hole before offering congratulations. The lower left shows Chess Lagomarsino, one of the semi-finalists in the recent tournament. The player in the lower right is none other than Jim Floyd, the 52-year-old veteran who created such havoc in the younger ranks by his spectacular march to the semi-final round. Floyd was finally beaten by Ansley after one of the most gruelling encounters of the tournament.

STRIB'S BOUT IN WICHITA IS HALTED

Wichita, Kas., September 10.—(AP) William A. Stribling's scheduled ten-round bout here Monday night with Mike Arnold, of Denver, was cancelled by the Kansas State Boxing commission after a physician reported the Georgia fighter's right hand had been injured.

Dr. L. C. Bishop, examining physician for the commission, reported Stribling had a torn ligament in the hand, which was causing him considerable pain. Stribling was in no condition to fight, Dr. Bishop said.

Stribling and Leo Diebel were charged by the Nebraska State Boxing commission with participating in a framed bout in Omaha last Tuesday.

Atlanta's Dog Champions.

As usual about this time of the year, autumn is twanging in the air, and closely allied to that "twanging" is the banging of guns and the whistle of handlers in the field trials.

For several years Atlanta has furnished leading contenders in the aristocracy of the dog world and this year that rule promises to hold.

The entries of John K. Ottley and Trammel Scott have been dashing their way to victories in the Georgia trials and other classics for years and other Atlanta members of the canine tribe have stepped in now and again to win a laurel or two.

News now comes from the far northwest that Mike Milligan, one of the best pointers ever whelped in Dixie, and the property of Major Trammel Scott, is in readiness for the great fall and winter trek through the trials. . .

Charlie Babcock, one of the greatest—if not the greatest—handlers of trial dogs in the nation, has had Mike up in Towner, N. D., and the first trial of this season for the veteran pointer will start on Monday in Gainsborough, province of Saskatchewan, Canada, in the chicken trials.

Charlie reports that Mike is in the best of health and though game is scarce, due to a May snow early this year, there has been enough game for a bit of good work.

Following the national trials at Gainsborough, Charlie will bring his string of dogs to the all-American, and from there they will go to the futurity stakes at Vinata, Okla., from where they will swing southward and eastward for the southeastern, Carolinian and Georgia trials and then to the Grand American.

They say Mike is getting old. And he is several years removed from the puppy stakes, but right now several "shadows" of Mike are running the fields in preparation for their job of keeping the family name on the lists of winners.

Mike Milligan's Mike is one puppy of promising proportions who claims the famous Mike Milligan as his sire. This pointer is a dead ringer for Mike and is now at the derby age. He is being put through his paces in Gainesville now and the breeder in Texarkana, Ark., who produced the pup declares that he is further advanced at this age than was Mike Milligan. If this statement is true, Major Trammel Scott is likely to have another famous Mike in the race before long.

A Slip—Nothing More.

A few days ago this column "aired a peeve" regarding the conduct of a few hoodlums at the Howard's midnight show last Monday.

There seems to be several who agree with the sentiments and some of them have written their agreement to us.

One correspondent wrote: "I agree emphatically with your statement that a few of the Howard patrons with distorted senses of humor made themselves extremely obnoxious, but there is one thing I wish to call to your attention: Al Short, captain of the nautical musicians, answered a request for 'Ramblin' Wreck,' Tech's war cry, and failed to play 'Glory to Old Georgia.' Wasn't that excuse enough for some grumbling by Georgia men in the audience?"

Yessir, Mr. Georgia Man, it was some excuse for grumbling, and just to find out if Friend Al had any objection to Georgia we showed your letter to him.

"Lord," said Al, "it was a pure and simple oversight. As a matter of fact, I didn't know what they meant when they yelled for 'Ramblin' Wreck,' so I asked one of the older members of the orchestra and he said he knew the tune, so we played it. If I had heard any demand for 'Glory' and had known what it was all about we would have played that, too, you can bet."

And just to prove that Al is in earnest let us divulge a little secret—Al Short and his melody boys are now in possession of music for all the college songs in the southeast, and each Saturday night after football games they will spring a surprise in the way of entertainment.

Al Short is for Georgia and for Tech, Mr. Correspondent. You may lay to that, and his slip of the midnight show was just that—a slip and nothing more.

Gene Tunney Resumes Grind Goes 5 Rounds

Champion Going Good After Layoff With Injury.

Lake Villa, Ill., September 10.—(AP) The peace and quiet that has reigned through Gene Tunney's training camp for the past three days due to the injury to his right eye, was broken today when the world's heavyweight champion resumed training, boxing five rounds with two sparring mates.

The champion's judgment of distance, timing of punches and general execution, was almost perfect. He missed occasionally with a right cross, but his left was working perfectly and his defensive work was almost impregnable.

The layoff in training had no effect on the champion, because he was more impressive today than in either of his two previous public workouts. Gene affected a white patch over his damaged right eye when he climbed into the ring, and it was still there when he left, despite the efforts of his sparring partners to knock it off. He was so much pleased with his condition that he decided to work again tomorrow with the public admitted for the usual $1.10.

The champion boxed two fast rounds with Jackie Williams, Chicago heavyweight, and three with Billy Vidabeck. Williams, boxing for the first time with Tunney, proved a very good sparring partner. He stepped right in and traded wallops with Gene in the first round. For a few seconds he managed to give more than he received, but Gene finally got the range and just before the round closed connected with a straight left to the jaw, following it with a right cross that sent Jackie down to one knee.

Jackie tired somewhat in the second, but kept on coming in, with Tunney outscoring him. The three rounds Tunney boxed with Vidabeck were a repetition of those that have gone before. Tunney handled him about as he pleased, connecting when and wherever he desired. Before beginning his boxing Tunney worked four rounds with the punching bags, two on the light and a similar number on the heavy swinging target.

The heat which Tunney encountered here after his arrival from Speculator, N. Y., has enabled him to reduce weight easier than he expected.

American Polo Team Wins First of Series

BY BRIAN BELL
Associated Press Sports Writer.

Westbury, N. Y., September 10.—(AP)—The United States polo team, uncovering a brand of coordinated play which surprised even its friends and shocked the challenging British team, rode away to a 13-to-3 victory today in the first game of the international challenge cup series.

Tommy Hitchcock, leading the terrific drive of the winners, showed the way by scoring six goals. Until late in the game, when he seemed to think that he could leave well enough alone and rest on his laurels, he was everywhere, driving the amazingly long shots which have made him famous, many of the smashing wallops ending their flight at or near the goal.

The sensational Hitchcock has been sick of late and his indisposition had kept him out of much of the play preliminary to the international matches which caused spectators to suggest that if he is sick his opponents would do well to hope that he would not play on one of his well days.

Thrills Crowd.

Two of Hitchcock's drives for distance goals brought the crowd up standing. He scored one goal from the neighborhood of 150 yards away.

Close behind Hitchcock was Devereaux Milburn, veteran captain of the Americans, whose hard riding and clever work, both on defense and offense, caused Lord Cowdray, of Hurnligham club, where polo has been played since 1873, to remark: "It's the Milburn of 15 years ago."

Malcolm Stevenson and J. Watson Webb could not keep up with their fast moving colleagues. Possibly no two polo players could have kept the pace, but they played great polo nevertheless. Stevenson started with a rush, while Webb, under way a trifle slower, was in his full stride at the close.

With two goals in the first chukker and two more in the third to one for the British, the second period being scoreless, the challengers seemed fairly stunned as the Americans ran out three in the fourth and rode away for the half intermission leading 7 to 1.

The British total stood at one through the fifth and sixth chukkers, while the United States was adding four more, but in the last two periods the play was even, each team scoring one each in the seventh and eighth.

Atkins Stars.

Major Eric G. Atkinson, captain and back of the British, bore the brunt of the burden for his team in the early stages of the game. Captain Roark, sensational Irish player, could not keep up with Tommy Hitchcock until near the end of the game, when he got the range and was showing how he can play when the final bell ended hostilities.

Captain Claude E. Pert found Devereaux Milburn entirely too much of a saddle full, but the freshman of the British team scored one of his team's three goals by combining two booming shots in the seventh period.

The cup possession is decided by two victories and if the Americans win the second game Wednesday it will not be necessary to play a third.

French Celebrate

Paris, September 10.—(AP)—When news of Rene La Coste's victory over William Tilden in the Davis cup matches was flashed to Parisians tonight it was received with great enthusiasm. Crowds on the four boulevards and in restaurants and cafes and audiences in the theaters rose to cheer the French victory.

Lou Threatens Heilman Lead In American

Climbs Up From Low Mark to Within 2 Percentage Points of Harry.

They, the personage, or whatever it is that has the biggest mouth in sports, just would persist in saying that Lou Gehrig would finish way down the list in the American league and be outdazzled by the brilliancy of Harry Heilman's stick-work. A perusal of the junior organization's batting averages for the current week will reveal that Detroit's Mr. Heilman is batting along at .397 while the Yankees' Mr. Gehrig is trailing right behind with .395 for his average.

That isn't bad for Lou. Not hardly. Al Simmons, genial and rather heavy-hitting outfielder of "Next Year" Cornelius McGillicuddy's Athletics, has dropped down to the average of .390.

And now, it would seem that Harry, who usually repeats every odd year, is very liable to be beaten out in this year's race. For you never can tell what these collegiate lads will do next.

A. J. T. Wins, 8-0

John Ford probably proved himself the best portsider in the amateur ranks of Atlanta's pitchers Saturday when he let the hard-hitting Fulton mills team down with four hits and a 8-0 defeat, thereby sending his club into a tie for the league lead.

Bailey and Osmer lift for the circuit to lead in the long range hitting, Osmer with three ehits in as many trips to the platter led both teams in hitting.

Pelicans Rout Crackers 10-1; Karr In Box

Birds Pound Bates for Early Lead, Then Batter Francis.

New Orleans, La., September 10. (Special.)—Behind the steady pitching of Benny Karr, former Atlanta mound ace and recently sent here from the major leagues, the New Orleans Pelicans, present Southern league leaders, defeated the Crackers. The final score read 10 to 1.

The Georgians were unable to do much with the offerings of the stingy Mr. Karr and could bag but seven scattered hits. The Atlantans scored their only run in the first inning when Haas poked a triple into deep center and scored on a single by Gilbert. The Pels scored three runs in the first, two in the fourth, four in the sixth and one in the eighth innings.

Bates started on the mound for the Atlantans but lasted only one-third of an inning. Ray Francis relieved him in the opening frame.

Scottdale Wins

Scottdale Mills, champions of the Manufacturers' league, won the first city series game Saturday, defeating the Southern Railway outfit, pennant winners in the Trammell Scott league, 11 to 5. The railroaders did not play the ball that they are capable of, and a great many errors, made at inopportune times, allowed many runs to cross the plate. They made nine errors in all.

The Scottdale team was on its toes all the time during the game, and threw the ball away only once. The bunching of hits by the Southern caused their scores, but errors allowed the Millers to score, where they otherwise would have been shut out.

BONNELLY FAILS IN PINCH.

Memphis, September 10.—Bonnelly, who relieved Griffin for Memphis in the third inning today, failed to prevent ball until he slammed out a triple in the last of the eighth. Apparently exhausted after that, the Chick hurler proved easy for the Nashville Vols, who scored four runs in the ninth to win to-day's game, 7 to 2.

A. A. C. Dual Water Meet Wednesday

Florida Champions Set To "Take" Southeastern Titleholders.

BY DICK HAWKINS.

Judging from all the advance dope at hand, there is to be a life-sized argument at East Lake Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 when the natators of Daytona Beach and Atlanta Athletic club clash in a dual meet to determine just which team is really better in its "natating."

The very fact that the A. A. C. outfit is just naturally getting too doggone good for the southeastern gang along with the further fact that the Daytona Beach team has become a perennial winner in the Florida association gives rise to a firm belief that somebody will have a large-sized tuck taken in his self-esteem Wednesday.

The Floridians firmly believe that they are coming up here to "take" the A. A. C. outfit, and the teammates of Captain "Red" Holleman are as firmly embued with the idea that the "taking" is going to be as difficult as the now celebrated taking of Richmond, which wasn't accomplished in a day.

"Red" Holleman has been called the "Napoleon of southern swimmers," and at least four Daytona swimmers are convinced that they are the Duke of Wellington.

Be that as it may, Daytona is bringing 12 huskies up here and every man from the youthful Harry Snowden, who boasts of but 14 summers, to D. F. Morris, who doesn't boast at all because he is 43, will be primed to play a major role in the "taking" show.

Judging from the records made by the Daytona swimmers in the Florida meet, which ended Saturday, the A. A. C. outfit may well prepare for trouble with a capital "T."

The list of events and the names of candidates for positions in these events follow: (But two men from each club will be allowed to compete in each event.)

50-Yard Free Style—Daytona, K. F. Sutherland, C. Earnhardt, H. Fraser, H. Buell. A. A. C.—McKinstry, Noyes.

100-Yard Free Style—Same as above for Daytona. Holleman, McKinstry and Noyes for A. A. C.

220-Yard Free Style — Daytona, Sutherland, C. Earnhardt, D. F. Morris. A. A. C., Holleman, Noyes, Bayliss.

440-Yard Free Style — Daytona, Sutherland, F. Earnhardt, B. F. Morris. A. A. C., Holleman, Bayliss.

PROMINENT MERMEN

Herewith are pictured a few of Atlanta's prominent mermen who will be in action Wednesday afternoon against the swimmers from Daytona Beach in the first of a series of dual meets in which the Atlanta Athletic club's swimming team will participate. Buster Harris, one of the fancy divers and entrant in the breast stroke, is pictured at the top in a back dive. Just below him is Bill Murray, diving champion of the Southeastern A. A. U. in a swan dive. The head picture at the left is of Dick McKinstry, one of the team's speedsters. Another sprinter and holder of several records is Red Holleman, just ready to take off at the bottom.

Atlanta Tennis Stars MakeGreat '27 Record

BY WHITNER CARY.

No matter with what pride Atlanta may look into the dim and distant past of her tennis glory or with with what hope she may gaze into the crystal ball concerning the future of her net stars, the plain and simple truth remains that the year 1927 should and will go down as the greatest year her court sons have ever enjoyed.

A glance at the records made in the tennis tournaments of the south prove this fact beyond the realm of argument. Just to refresh one's mind and to set before you in orderly fashion what the tennis players of this city have accomplished to put Atlanta on the court map of Dixie during the past year let's take a peep into that rather dry and musty data known as statistics.

During the past season seven major tournaments were held in the south. There were other spring and late winter events which catered to the eastern players and which could not rightfully be called pure Dixie engagements, due to the fact that play was dominated by the invading players.

These seven tournaments were made up of the southern, played at Memphis; the championship of the Carolinas, played at Greenville; the South Carolina championship, played at Charleston; the North Carolina championship, played at Asheville; the cotton states, played at Anniston; the Georgia state, played at Atlanta, and the Tennessee state, played at Memphis.

Atlantans Win Often.

Of these seven tournaments, Atlanta players took part in six and in each case it was a Gate City representative who walked off with the singles honors, while in no less than two a pure Atlanta team won the doubles title and in two other instances a Gate City player, teamed with another entry, annexed the partnership championship.

Jack Mooney, with four singles titles at his belt, heads the list, while Bryan Grant accounts for the other two.

Mooney started off the season by winning the South Carolina singles title and in partnership with Colonel Walt C. Johnson, of Fort Benning, took the Palmetto state doubles. His next venture was the Carolinas championship staged on the courts of the Greenville Country club. Jack romped through the fast field assembled at this popular tournament. The cotton states, played at Anniston, and the North Carolina, staged at Asheville, were the other scenes of his singles triumphs. His two defeats of the year, in purely southern competition, occurred in the southern final at Memphis and the Georgia state final in this city. In each instance it was Bryan Grant who was the victor.

Numerous Doubles Winners.

In the doubles game, a department in which Atlanta net representatives have long played a leading role, one finds, as mentioned before, Mooney paired with Colonel Johnson taking the South Carolina title. The Carolinas doubles championship was won for the second time by that great team, Frank Owens, of Atlanta, and Julian Robertson, of Salisbury. This brilliant combination, for it is nothing short of that, waded through the many good doubles teams in this tournament without the loss of a set. It might be mentioned that this was but an encore to their performance in 1926. There is much to be said about many good doubles teams in Dixie, but in this writer's humble opinion there is no combination now playing tennis in the south that is the equal of "Hop" Owens and Julian Robertson. It was a great pity that they did not team together in the southern. For in that case there is a strong probability that at least half the Dixie doubles crown would rest in this city.

This same Frank Owens, teamed with Berry Grant, made a runaway race of the North Carolina state doubles and paired with Nat Thornton annexed the Georgia state doubles as well.

Add to this imposing record the fact that Owens, paired with Douglas Watters, of Vincennes, Ind., went to the final of the southern doubles, that it was an Atlanta team that was the runner-up in the North Carolina, Carolinas and Georgia state tournaments and further glory is brought to Atlanta tennis.

Rajah Climbs To 3rd Place In National

Replaces Joe Harris in Famous Pittsburgh Triumvirate of Hitters.

Rogers Hornsby has busted up the playhouse of P. and L. Waner and Joe Harris in the National league batting race, just as the Giants hope to bust up the playhouse of the Pirates in the race for the National league pennant. For Rogers, this week, has moved into third place in the stickwork marathon, and is one percentage point behind L. Waner, with an average reading .361.

It used to be that the first three places were occupied by P. Waner, L. Waner and Joe Harris, but Joe is now in fourth place with a percentage which reads .356, and at the rate Rajah has been going of late it seems very unlikely that Joe can pass him, and that Lloyd is in danger of finishing in third place. Paul Waner, who is on top with .387, is in a very good position to finish at the top.

Double-Header At Fort Mac Today

A double-header will be played at Fort McPherson this afternoon between crack amateur ball teams. In the first game of the twin bill the Twenty-Second Infantry will lock horns with the Fulton Bag and Cotton Co. This game will start at 1:30 o'clock.

Beck and Gregg's baseball team, composed of boys who sling hardware during their spare moments, will oppose the soldiers in the second game, which will get under way at 3:15 o'clock.

Since returning from Camp McClellan, the Twenty-Second Infantry boys have won seven out of eight games played. Batteries for the first game for the soldiers will be Ballentine and Rowe, while Lewis and Rowe will work for the infantrymen in the last game.

Davis Regains Southern Loop Batting Lead

Wells, of Birmingham, Is Leading Pitchers by Large Margin.

With less than 20 games left, a regular, Wilbur Davis, of the Pelicans, has batted his way back to the top of the Southern league batsmen and is now leading with an average reading .377, which is just one percentage point ahead of Phillips, Nashville catcher.

It's been a great year for Wilbur, and those Cracker fans who were brave enough to venture out and watch the Pels here not long ago, saw "howcome it was" that he is leading the loop.

Pitcher Wells, of Birmingham, is leading the Southern flingers with an average of .917. This Mr. Wells has worked in 12 games, losing 1 and winning 11, which hasn't hurt the Barons any.

GEORGIA'S HOPES FOR 1927

French Stars Win Famous Davis Cup

errors as on his own smashing placements took the third set.

After the rest period Tilden was slow and tired. Lacoste got fresher with every point. He was here, there and everywhere and won, 6-2.

Johnston, once a powerful factor on the courts, was the only defense left. And he was not good enough. After dropping the first set, 6-4, he extended himself to the utmost and won the second by the same score. The third was a 6-2 romp for Cochet, the Frenchman being ahead, 4-0, at one time.

In the final, deciding set, Johnston made a brave effort when Cochet had worked to a 5-2 lead. The former ball-boy, of Lyons, tried diligently to end the set there, but Johnston brought the eighth game to deuce and finally won it, 10-8. Then incredibly, Johnston won a game at love.

Loses Strength.

But his strength was gone and Cochet ran out the tenth game, 4-1.

The Davis cup now goes to France and its period of residence there will be indefinite. With Tilden and Johnston through, the United States has only untried youngsters for the future and Lacoste, Cochet, Brugnon and Borotra are just reaching their prime.

The United States held the cup for seven years while Tilden and Johnston were good and, France, no doubt, will keep the cup as long as their four fine young men remain young. That may be some time and probably will be some time.

Julian S. Myrick, chairman of the Davis cup committee of the United States Lawn Tennis association, was almost in tears when the players had left the court.

"We lost the cup to a better team," he said. "The French players were glorious in the victory and won cleanly and fairly. May God bless them and the cup.

There was little cheering for the winners, not because the French are unpopular, for the contrary is true, but because there was a certain note of tragedy in the defeat of the American veterans.

Tilden, versed in histrionics, was able to contain himself, but Johnston, probably blaming himself for loss of the trophy, cried when the victorious Frenchmen appeared for the cup.

"Little Bill" approached the press box and said to some friends:

"Well, it's all in a lifetime. We can't go on forever."

Tilden made no comment.

The French were joyous after the last point had been made and their rackets were tossed high in the air.

"We've been after this cup for a long while," said Jean Borotra, who with Jacques Brugnon yesterday lost the doubles match to Tilden and Francis T. Hunter. "We now shall have a chance to show challengers the same good and gracious treatment that always has been accorded us over here."

Bill Tilden's Legs Cause of Defeat

cannot help feeling on the whole it was not the same Tilden on the court this afternoon who faced Cochet Thursday.

Even his famous service which he has been depending upon all week was lacking. He used a slow American trick service with a high bounce throughout most of the match. Most of the time he elected to stand on the baseline and slice back the returns of the French youth. He did this because of the twist that LaCoste imparts to his strokes. It is practically impossible to drive the strokes of LaCoste from the back of the court.

With the defeat of Tilden the Davis cup actually started on its journey to France. It hardly seemed possible that Johnston on the form he has been displaying could defeat Cochet.

No Practice.

"Little Bill" has played little tennis during the past year while the French star has competed in all the major tournaments. Moreover he is in perfect physical condition and at the peak of his form. Johnston's last stand in defense of the cup was worthy of the great sportsman he is. He fought the French youth every inch of the way, rushing to give ground until he was clearly passed by one of the uncanny drives that only Cochet is capable of.

For a time in the last set the plucky little Californian showed flashes of the form that has won him honors at the net game in every country of the world.

But after one or two beautiful forehand drives that usually brought the huge crowd to its feet he would miss a ridiculously easy shot at the net.

The only logical answer to that is simply lack of practice. Had Johnston been in the east two months ago playing in the big tournaments, the famous trophy might still be locked in our vault. For some reason best known to himself and the Davis cup committee he remained in California up until a week ago. Naturally he could not reach top form in such a short time.

It was announce tonight that Rene LaCoste and Henri Cochet would definitely play in the national singles championship next week at Forest Hills.

This will probably mean that our national title will also be carried overseas along with the Davis cup. If LaCoste and Cochet maintain the form they disprayed here for another week it seems unlikely that any of the American players will be able to stop them.

Grace Methodists Beat Gordon, 6-2

Brant Boswell only allowed Gordon Street Baptist two hits Saturday at Spiller's and Grace Methodist won 6 to 2. Grace Methodist won the championship of the Sunday School association and Gordon Street Baptist is champion of the "Y" Church association. Both teams fielded well and played a jam-up brand of ball despite the wet field.

McCrorey, Lindsey and Gulledge hit well for Grace, getting two hits each. Boswell pitched a steady game and struck out six men. Swint, for Gordon Street, secured the only two safeties off of Boswell. A fast double play from McCrorey to Boad to Lindsey ended the interassociation classic. No extra bases were made and a large cheering crowd turned out to witness the melee. The summary:

KNOW YOUR JACKETS

ED CROWLEY.

Ed Crowley, the youngster who will captain the Georgia Tech gridders in this year's campaign, is expected to develop into one of the south's outstanding ends this year. Ed is cool, steady and resourceful on the field and is good in offense and defense.

Crowley is 22 years old, six feet one inch in height and weighs 185 pounds. He was born in Watkinsville, Ga., but before coming to Tech had as much idea of how to play football as a third-rate boxer has of beating J. Dempsey.

In addition to being a gridder of some note, Crowley holds down third base on the baseball team.

The captain for 1927 shows all the indications of making a good one and certainly there is no man better fitted for the job of leading the Jackets through as tough a schedule as is Crowley, playing his third year on the varsity and who has a thorough knowledge and understanding of the game.

Hank Bjorkman Joins Constitution

Bjorkman, will give the readers of The Constitution a series of stories different from any they have ever read.

Among his other duties at Tech, Hank is delegated to do most of the scouting and after looking over the opposition he returns to the flats to drill the scrubs in enemy play. His messages to the readers of The Constitution will bring first-hand, expert information on the team which is to oppose Tech on the following Saturday.

Twice a Week.

These stories will appear twice each week. The first will be printed early in the week and will be devoted to analysis of the enemy's play and the second will come on Friday or Saturday morning and will tell just how well the varsity at Tech has succeeded in practice against opposition plays.

And the best part of the whole thing is that Hank insists on telling the truth and nothing but. When he was approached with a proposition to write for The Constitution he shied like a colt because he thought perhaps his features would be like so many others of the type—articles written by a staff member and used under his name.

When he was assured that he would be expected to write his own articles and would be given full latitude as to comment he placed his Swedish name on the dotted line and the readers of The Constitution will reap the benefit.

Just in case you might know Hank Bjorkman only as the sandy-haired, freckled giant who coaches the ends at Tech Flats, let us go back three years when the gridiron warriors of Dartmouth were carving themselves a niche in the hall of football glory. Hank Bjorkman was captain of that 1924 team and also captain of the 1924

NEW ORLEANS SPOT COTTON.

New Orleans, September 10.—Spot cotton closed steady, 67 points down; sales, 6,003; low middling, 20.50; middling, 22.50; good middling, 23.25. Receipts, 6,994; stock, 232,903.

New York, September 10.—(AP)—A more severe break developed in the cotton market today under continued heavy general liquidation. December contracts sold off to 22.70, decline of 86 points from Friday's closing quotation and more than $10 a bale from the high price touched immediately after publication of the government crop report on Thursday. They closed at 22.90, the general market closing steady at a net decline of 76 to 80 points.

The market opened easy at a decline of 35 to 44 points under liquidation and southern or local selling, promoted by relatively weak cables from Liverpool and favorable weather reports. Trade buying and covering caused rallies of a few points from time to time, but selling seemed to increase in volume as prices worked lower and stop orders were uncovered in considerable volume.

Prospects for continued good weather over the week-end evidently encouraged bearish or reactionary sentiment, and selling was reported on that account, as well as in liquidation of long contracts. October declined to 22.50 and March to 22.90 in late trading, net declines of 86 to 100 points and of about 200 points from the high levels of the week. A flurry of covering brought rallies of 15 or 20 points from the lowest in the last few minutes.

The bulk of the day's selling was attributed to further liquidation of old long accounts supposedly on belief that the August deterioration in crop prospects had been discontinued and that the technical position of the market had been weakened by recent heavy buying, while some traders talked of a possible improvement in crop reports should the present better weather continue.

Private cables said the decline in Liverpool was due to liquidation and hedge selling in the absence of bull support, but reported improvement in cloth demand from India.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 62,000 bales against 88,000 last year.

COTTON BREAKS $4 PER BALE.

New Orleans, September 10.—(AP)—General liquidation, induced by the favorable weather in the belt and hedge selling caused a break of approximately $4 a bale in the cotton market today, and Thursday's gain of $10 a bale was practically wiped out. The market, however, rallied about 20 points from the lows in the late trading with December selling up from 22.48 to 22.64, where it closed, 68 points net down. The general market closed steady at declines of 68 to 73 points.

The decline was started when Liverpool reported a sharp break there, due to general liquidation and hedge selling, probably induced by favorable reports from the United States. First trades showed losses of 32 to 45 points, but prices rallied shortly after the opening and recovered 16 to 17 points with October at 23.01 and December 23.31. These prices were the highs of the day.

The subsequent decline was only temporarily halted by slight rallies, due to covering for over the week-end. October eventually reached 22.48, December 22.75 and January 22.77, 83 to 85 points below yesterday's close. A renewal of covering in the final trading brought on a recovery of 16 to 19 points and the market held most of this gain until the end.

Exports for the day totaled 9,930 bales.

Success of '27 Tobacco Crop In Georgia Already Indicates Increased Acreage Next Year

$11,400,000 Paid for 60,000,000 Pounds Grown This Year, Biggest Yield Produced in State.

BY E. C. WESTBROOK,
Tobacco Specialist, State College of Agriculture.

Athens, Ga., September 10.—Approximately 60,000,000 pounds of tobacco were sold in Georgia markets this season at an average of about 19 cents per pound, or a total of $11,400,000. There are a few reports that are yet to be received so it will be several days before final figures can be obtained.

This year's crop of tobacco was 10 million pounds more than was anticipated and exceeded the largest preceding crop by 10 million pounds. It exceeded the 1926 crop by 20 million pounds.

The value of the 1927 crop exceeded any preceding crop approximately $2,000,000 and ranks second only to the cotton crop. Of the 60,000,000 pounds of tobacco sold on Georgia markets this year approximately 3,000,000 pounds came from Florida, Alabama and South Carolina.

Yield Per Acre.

The yield per acre is estimated at 750 pounds. This compares with 770 pounds for 1926 and 720 pounds for 1925. This would mean that Georgia planted 76,000 acres to tobacco this year as compared with 51,000 acres last year and 67,000 acres in 1925.

Assuming that where tobacco was planted an average of eight acres was planted to the farm, it would mean that tobacco was planted on 9,500 Georgia farms this year with a gross return per farm of more than $1,100.

The bright tobacco industry has been considered one of Georgia's "war babies." It begins to look as though it is getting to be quite a youngster. The outlook at the present time is that this youngster is likely to make considerably more growth next year.

If conditions are favorable we would not be surprised to see Georgia produce 100,000,000 pounds of tobacco in 1928. The tobacco money has meant a good deal to the south. Georgia farmers and business men as well. Enthusiasm prevails not only in south Georgia, but has extended to many sections of north Georgia.

While individual returns did not run as high this year as last, there were a few farmers who made as high as 400 to $500 gross per acre. It is the story of the high individual returns that has stimulated interest in new territory.

In the northern half of Georgia only a small percentage of the soils are adapted to the production of a high-class cigarette tobacco. Farmers would do well to find out if they have suitable tobacco soil before attempting its production. Public statements have been made in which it was declared that it was impossible to produce two much tobacco. It is hoped that farmers will not be misled by statements of this kind.

Small acreages of tobacco were planted in Oglethorpe and Forsyth counties this year, but not all of these crops have been sold as yet and the success of these growers cannot be determined until all of the tobacco has been sold and the results tabulated.

All of the Georgia markets are closed and it will be necessary to ship the remainder of the crop to the Carolina, or Virginia markets.

The Georgia State College of agriculture has a large amount of experimental data on the growing and handling of tobacco which should be of considerable help to farmers in new sections that are expecting to plant tobacco next year. Farmers will do well to avail themselves of this information.

Growth by Years.

It will be interesting to many to see the growth of the bright tobacco in Georgia since to commercial production began. We give below the production and average price for each year:

Year	Production Pounds	Value
1917	350,000	$ 80,000
1918	3,000,000	1,035,000
1919	10,327,000	1,520,167
1920	9,677,000	2,444,006
1921	5,139,000	513,900
1922	3,525,000	841,200
1923	9,100,000	2,338,700
1924	30,024,502	6,531,659
1925	50,000,000	7,239,000

FREIGHT TARIFF ON COAL PROBED

Washington, September 10.—(AP)—Investigation into freight rates on coal moved another step forward today with a tentative report by two interstate commerce commission examiners holding that rates on bituminous in carloads from Pennsylvania, Maryland and northern West Virginia mines to destinations in New England and the middle Atlantic states for track delivery were not unreasonable or otherwise unlawful.

The report, submitted by Irving L. Koch and W. J. Harris, has yet to be passed on by the commission. It found that tidewater rates on bituminous from the same mines to New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, and from mines in Virginia, southern West Virginia and eastern Kentucky to Hampton Roads were not unreasonable, except that the transhipment rates from the former mines to New York for export and coastwise movement were unduly prejudicial in that they exceed the same kind of rates by certain amounts to Philadelphia and Baltimore.

The examiners further recommended as desirable the establishment of additional joint rates and through routes on prepared sizes of high and low volatile bituminous from certain districts in Virginia, West Virginia and eastern Kentucky to points in New England and middle Atlantic states over designated routes.

The recommendations would carry out to a certain extent the requests of coal users in New England and middle Atlantic states, who have sought permanent establishment of joint through rates on bituminous and semi-anthracite from southern fields which the commission temporarily prescribed during the anthracite strike two years ago.

"The issues considered in the report," the examiners said, "developed for the most part as a result of the domestic fuel needs of New England. Until recent years New England had depended almost entirely upon anthracite coal for its domestic fuel, but owing to scarcity of supply, prices, and other reasons, the consumers in New England have been gradually turning more to bituminous coal."

Annual consumption of bituminous in New England varies from year to year, but it was estimated at approximately 20,000,000 tons.

TEXTILE STOCKS PRICES UNCHANGED DURING PAST WEEK

Gastonia, N. C., September 10.—Practically all textile stocks of southern cotton mills remained unchanged in the bid price for the past week. A slight gain of eight points was made in the average bid of 25 most active common stocks and the close for the week stood at 109.32 as compared with 109.24 a week ago according to compilation of R. S. Dickson & Co.

The preferred issues remained in strong demand with a fair volume of investment stocks changing hands for the week.

New York, September 10.—(AP)—Easing tendencies crept into the bond market today as week-end realizing appeared on a rather wide scale. Recessions were fractional, however, since there was little change in the money situation to bring about any immoderately large liquidation.

Profit-taking was most pronounced among the high-grade railway liens which have been hovering close to their year's high levels. Erie Refunding 5s, Lake Shore 4s, Rock Island 4s and a few others were included in the list of soft spots. The Nickel Plate issues were in rather brisk demand.

Convertible rails were irregular. Chesapeake and Ohio 4 1-2s moved downward slightly, offset by a fractional gain in Southern Pacific 4s, which were absorbed freely around par.

Public utilities continued their firm trend of the past week or two, but only moderate buying developed. Cities Service Power 6s again moved close to 104 7-8, their high price for the year. Irregularity characterized the industrial group, with losses in U. S. Rubber 5s and Shell Oil 5s, against gains by Pillsbury Flour Mills 6s and Julius Kayser 5 1-2s.

A few French issues displayed rallying tendencies, especially the governmental 7 1-2s and City of Cologne 6 1-2s. Netherlands 6s attracted buyers around 103 1-8, and a few Belgian securities were moderately active just under their peaks for the year.

The United States government group exhibited a mixed trend, and the volume of transactions was small.

OPTIMISM PERVADES STEEL DURING WEEK

New York, September 10.—(AP)—Actual operations in the steel market during the week were little changed from the rate of the past two months, however, more optimism was apparent, with the industry said to be confident that many buyers would soon come into the market for more than ordinary supplies. There was a slight increase reported in ingot production in August, the first gain since February. Pipe mills were said to be looking forward to substantial improvement. Pig iron was quiet and unchanged.

While copper continued quiet with domestic buyers holding off, the tone was generally steady with producers asking 13 1-4c for electrolytic delivered. Consumers are believed to have their current requirements covered, but sellers ar said to be anticipating more substantial buying against forward needs. A moderate export demand has been reported at unchanged prices.

Tin price fluctuations were narrow and general consuming demand was confined to small lots. Tin plate production for 1927 was estimated at 10 per cent lower than last year.

Lead was again easy, with leading producers shading prices. The lower levels were said to have attracted a better consuming demand.

Zinc was steady. Consuming demand averaged fair. The trade was awaiting the August statistical statement.

Antimony turned slightly easier toward the close of the week. Absence of important demand and a little selling pressure of spot and futures were the principal features.

WILSON, MELL GIVEN OIL INSPECTION POSTS

Comptroller General William A. Wright Saturday announced the appointment of S. H. Wilson as state oil chemist and Pat Mell as chief clerk of the newly-created oil inspection division in the comptroller general's office.

Other oil inspection personnel will be announced Tuesday or Wednesday, the comptroller general said.

Wilson was state chemist under the J. J. Brown regime in the department of agriculture and Mell was chief clerk in the oil inspection division of the same department. Both were removed from office when Eugene Talmadge took control of the department in June. Their removal, Mr. Talmadge announced at the time, was part of a general clean-up of adherents of the Brown administration.

Oil inspection was taken out of the department of agriculture and put in the hands of the comptroller general by the 1927 general assembly, in the Platt-Neill bill, which cut the force from about 190 men to six.

The new officers will not take up their duties until the first of 1927, when money for operation of the inspection system first will be available. Under the former plan operating expenses came out of inspection fees.

Davison-Paxon to Present Brilliant Style Exhibits

Preceded by elaborate preparations for what officials termed "the most brilliant fashion show ever staged in this part of the country," an exposition of delightful new feminine clothing for all occasions will be staged from Monday through Friday of this week by the Davison-Paxon company, affiliated with R. H. Macy & Co., of New York.

The fashion shows will be presented twice daily, in the afternoon at 3 o'clock and at night at 8 o'clock. The general public Saturday was invited to attend and see the gorgeous creations displayed by living models of professional training to show gowns at greatest advantage.

A special feature of the five-day show will be a "tout ensemble" dinner at 6:30 o'clock Thursday night in connection with the style exhibit. This dinner will be held in the restaurant-auditorium on the sixth floor of the Peachtree street department store, where all the displays will be shown.

During the expositions music will be furnished by Vic Meyers and his orchestra.

"The idea behind the style show, which will be the most brilliant thing of its kind ever attempted in the south," Mrs. George A. Eckford, of the Davison-Paxon advertising department, said Saturday, "is to demonstrate the swing of the pendulum of feminine style away from the severe sports wear and simple tailored garments of recent years. This year's clothing is decidedly more subtly feminine, and the style show will include them from gowns, hats and wraps to accessories of all kinds.

"The revue will include the smartest gowns and feminine wear of the season, featuring many beautiful American adaptations of Parisian designs. It will demonstrate in graphic manner what the well-dressed woman will wear this year."

A professional New York style expert has been secured to take charge of the show, which will be staged in a special setting in the restaurant-auditorium.

BOOK REVIEWS IN TABLOID

Cognac Hill is a first novel by a well-known poet, Charles Divine, whose earlier books, "City Ways and Company Streets" (poems), "Gypsy Gold" (poems), "The Road to Town" (poems), "Pirtle Drums It In" (one-act play) and (in preparation) "New York and Return" (poems), as well as numerous articles and poems in various magazines, will be remembered.

"Cognac Hill" expresses a phase of the war hitherto untouched in fiction, the restless ineffectualness of the men and women held behind the lines in a tranquil village, while other men fought the war. There were thousands of Americans like them, unable to accomplish their wished-for transfer to an active fighting corps. Their work was tedious and inactive; but its recital should awaken poignant memories in every American who served, relaxed or recuperated behind the lines, and there was none over there who did not, at least for a time.

This is an important contribution to the vast body of war literature, in that it treats with a subject of tremendous scope, and traces accurately and vividly the mental attitude of those who were inactive in the midst of action, chained to peace in the midst of the world's greatest fight, supporting the fighting machine, but never fighting. As an overtone to the heavier mood there runs a triple love story, lightened by the inevitable humor of the doughboy.

Who Is Charles Divine?

He was born in Binghamton, N. Y. and is a graduate of Cornell university. His first job was reporter on the New York Sun, for which he was later special correspondent with Colonel Theodore Roosevelt. He stayed on the Sun until the United States entered the war, when he enlisted in Binghamton and was sent first to Camp Wadsworth in Spartanburg, S. C., where the Twenty-seventh trained for overseas. While there he was associate editor of the Gas Attack. When he went to France it was as a private in a sanitary squad, with which he was sent to a hill top near Nevers, where a huge base hospital was built. There he stayed for the duration of the war, much against his will. It was this experience which resulted in the novel "Cognac Hill."

NEW FICTION RECEIVED.

The Passenger to Folkstone. By J. S. Fletcher, an author whose stories are read with much interest. His plots are always clever. While there is a similarity about his stories, a Fletcher story is never turned down by any reader of mystery stories.

In this story the author tells of one hotel, among many, along the cliffs of Folkestone, at the rear of the famous promenade, where on clear days one can look out of England into France, the French coast being only 20 miles away.

The mystery begins on the cliffs of Folkestone, and it is full of incidents as it weaves its way back and forth between England and France. There's a hunt for a famous Russian diamond, a packet of papers and a black morocco case containing 50,000 pounds. And before the final winding up in Paris men and women, guilty and innocent, find themselves entangled, but finally justice is meted out. (Alfred A. Knopf, publisher, New York.)

Sun and Moon. By Vincent H. Gowen, who, according to the London Times, "has a close and detailed knowledge of the intimacies of Chinese domestic life and the skill to weave his knowledge into a living background for his story."

Timothy Herrick, who lived in the English colony of Pekin during the life of his beautiful young wife, Nancy, the daughter of a consul, was educated in England, and since whose death he, to use a very frequent expression, had "gone Chinese." The story of his life and that of his two motherless English children, especially his little daughter, Nancy, will be read with exceeding interest, and feeling.

The story is filled with thrills from the first page to the last, and only one familiar with China and Chinese life could have written so earnestly and feelingly of this family which once upon a time was known in England.

The author went to China in 1914 under the missionary board of the Episcopal church, and in due course became an Episcopal minister. He attended the Language school at Nanking and worked at several missionary schools all in the diocese of Hanking. Mr. Gowen is the son of Dr. Herbert Henry Gowen, clergyman, author, professor and historian, who was at one time in charge of Chinese missions at Honolulu, Dr. Gowen is the author of many books in which the history of China and Chinese are the basis. He married Miss Mary Angela Gilmore, a writer, and is capable of writing this interesting and fascinating story of the inner life of a strange household, an English family living in China. (Little, Brown & Co., Boston.)

On the Air.—In these stories of humor and pathos, romance and adventure, radio is shown playing a vital factor in the drama of life. By Paul D. Augsbury. This book is a collection of short stories, each of which is filled with life and activity and all are up to date. "On the Air" is the story of the actor to whom the radio brings a leading role; another tells how a radio report brings happiness to a girl, and through the radio, Mr. Blossom has a chance to speak his mind. There are still other stories, all of which are entertaining. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

Children of the Wind.—By Doris Peel, a 19-year-old girl whom the publishers consider a "find." And they announce the fact that her first novel is neither smart nor sophisticated. "Its achievement is that rarest of things in any novel, that almost unheard-of thing in a first novel—true penetration and understanding."

The reader is first introduced to the different characters at Mrs. Landor's garden party—all garden parties are generally attractively described but it takes youth to bring out the real beauty of the flowers and the charm of guests. The story is woven around Roger Blythe and Nellie Pettingil and the eventful day of October 24, their wedding day, when they stood in "the little dim, ash-gray church, fragrant with flowers." (Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston, Price $2.50.)

By Night.—By Robert Clay, autthor of "A Chequer Board." The author has written a thrilling mystery story in which the characters all seem to have an unreal appearance—there's Miss Melita, Neil, Kito, the Japanese gardener, and others, all of whom were witnesses to the loathsome inhuman head with its sightless eyes—a mystery which no man had been able to solve. Finally Neil felt that it was up to him to do the impossible, for there was a young girl he could not forget. The secret of this story is so cleverly shrouded that it is not known until the last page. (Lippincott's Book, Philadelphia.)

Daphne's In Love.—The author's latest novel makes its debut to the lovers of real fiction with the praise and commendation of all the critics and the publishers' staff says that "individually and collectively it was enjoyed immensely."

The home office is so much pleased with Mr. Farson's contribution to the fiction world that it has been sent out "on the road" where it is sure to meet all classes of readers. This charming young heroine impresses one at the very start that she is in love—with life. She loved life and was eager to learn what life had in store for her, so she set her own pace and could not stop. It was not long before she had experienced all the adventures of a third season butterfly and yet she was only a debutante.

"I wonder how it feels to be engaged to two men at one time?"

It was not long before she could answer her own question. And yet she continued the pace, down the road that all flappers go. While to her friends she continued to turn a smiling face as she led the "crowd" in her set, in her heart she was beginning to wonder where this road would lead her, and if, after all, life had not left a few worries for her on its roadside.

Finally she came to the end of the road which led to The Jazzamine, a very appropriate name for this place of amusement. It was here that something big did happen! This is the story! It is a human interest story woven around modern people thoroughly alive who are always ready to play the game.

Through the open window the dancers watch the piper as he comes down the road of life with the bill which has to be paid. Pleasure goes away and you pay the piper with a pathetic smile—that is what Daphne, the debutante, did. (The Century Co., New York.)

THE WAY OF REVELATION.

Way of Revelation. By Wilfrid Ewart. A new edition of this remarkable novel with an important foreword by Stephen Graham. The great war was the fiery test of manhood and womanhood—the story of this time covers a period of five years. Mr. Graham says that this novel is probably the greatest which came out of the British experience in the war.

The author was barely thirty years of age who, having experienced all the sufferings of four years' service in the war, lived to write this book and then to be cut down by a stray shot in Mexico City on an Old Year's night while watching the celebration from his window.

In writing this story the author realized that the stage setting must be attractive. It is staged in London—in English society before the war. He created his characters "whose lives are progressing to the frivolous tune of English society before the war." Among them are Eric Sinclair and Adrain Knoyle, typical young men about town, there is lovely Lady Rosemary Meynell, then there's the "uncommon young woman" very literary, who is the leader or the central figure of the latest and most up-to-date artists of literadom.

Men and women of London society had been carefree almost to the point of recklessness when the sound of war was heard in the distance and the picture changes to one of war times. It is here that the author presents the effect of the five years of war, wanderings and want—he calls them "dissolution," "travail," "dawn" and peace"—on the two young men and the two young women of his creation.

The author portrays very strong pictures of the war times, of days at the front, of those remaining in the homeland. It is a real story. The publishers in the front of the book make the following announcement: "The characters in this book are fictitious and have no connection with any persons, living or deceased."

The book has been of so much interest that it was found necessary to print a new edition. Sir Philip Gibbs says: "No more truthful and vivid picture of life between 1914-19 has been written in English."

The writer must have lived over each scene again while writing it—he must have felt deeply the sincerity of his words as he described the glory and the tragedy of the world war. (D. Appleton & Co. Price $2.50.)

HAPPY IS THE CHILD WITH A BOOK.

There is no more attractive picture than a little tot with a book—candy and ice cream, blocks and toys should come first—and then books. Books with bright-colored pictures and little snatches of verse suitable for the nursery or the kindergarten—and here they are fresh from MacMillan's, and are called The Happy Hour Series:

"The Pied Piper of Hamelin." A Child's Story.
"The Bremen Band."
"The Three Billy Goats."
"Sambo," with illustrations by Frank Dobias.
"The Three Little Pigs."
"Jack and the Beanstalk."
"The Steadfast Tin Soldier."
"Humpty Dumpty."
"Wee Winkie" from "Mother Goose."
"Hansel and Gretel." Illustrated by Berta and Elmer Hader.
"The Ugly Duckling."
"Chicken Little and Little Half Chick."

(The MacMillan company, New York. Price 50 cents.)

"SKIPPY."

Always Belittlin'—Skippy Whistles the Patter. By Percy Crosby. "Skippy," it may be said, is a national character—his friends and admirers are numberless. American humor is not questioned even by the Englishman, for with such writers as George Ade, Ring Lardner, Irvin Cobb, Don Marquis and others, the American man and woman can always find something humorous and laughable.

Among the precocious representatives of the kindergarten along with Buster Brown, Squeezix, Nice Baby, etc., is found Skippy, who has become something more than a character, and the prediction is that he will find a place in American literature in which Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn lead the list.

"Always Belittlin'" contains short stories in which Skippy makes his first appearance. This is a comic strip in which the Senior and Junior of every family are equally interested. (The Unicorn Press, New York.)

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

Five Mice in a Mouse Trap. By Laura E. Richards. It is the story of the man in the moon. "Done in the vernacular from the Lunacular." The illustrations are by Kate Greenaway, Addie Ledyard and others. This is an attractive book and contains a most interesting story for the little folks. (The Page Co. Boston.)

Charlie and His Friends. Written and illustrated by Helen Hill and Violet Maxwell, authors of "Charlie and His Kitten Topsy," etc. As the little readers will recall in the other Charlie books he has been a little boy playing alone with his puppy and kittens. But a summer in the country teaches him many things and he finds a number of new friends, among them being an Indian who takes him camping, and several little boys, all of whom make splendid comrades. (MacMillan Company. New York.)

Lanes O'Ladland. By John J. Eberhardt, who is nationally known in Rotary and Shrine circles. He has been called "the poet of the plains." His verse, so attractively illustrated, will carry the little folks to Gladland.

"This little book will carry you back to playhood days where smiles 'n' dirty faces 'll drive from your busy mind the cares and responsibilities of a work-a-day world."

MAGAZINES FOR SEPTEMBER.

The American Review of Reviews. Written by Albert Shaw. The front cover bears the message of what this interesting number contains. For instance, there's a story on the Prince of Wales—a World Character— by P. W. Wilson; His Horsemanship—by an American Observer; Aspects of the Sacco-Vanzetti Case, as reviewed by the editor; The Wheat Farmer Uses the "Combine," by Henry J. Allen (former governor of Kansas); Why the Naval Conference Failed, An Analysis by Frank H. Simond; The British Polo Challenge, by J. C. Cooley; Behind a Boy's Throne, by T. J. C. Martyn; The Pacific Conference, by Professor George Crafton Wilson; Does the Buyer Get His Money's Worth? These and many other subjects are most interestingly discussed.

Scribner's for this month presents a most attractive front page of a polo story, Hokum, in which Struthers Burt smiles at the Intellectuals; Two Old-Timers, by Will James, cowboy-artist; A Death in the Stadium, by Robert Nathan, etc. There are also several most interesting stories and poems, by Corinne Roosevelt Robinson, Wilson MacDonald, Lawrence Lee, and others.

Current History. Latin-American number. United States Policy Toward Latin America; The American Standpoint, is discussed by Dana G. Munro, of the state department, and others, and Latin-American Views by Baltasar Brum, former president of Uruguay, and other prominent citizens of that country. The book is attractively illustrated and there are a number of writers who discuss the different phases of Latin-American life and civilization.

Harper's Magazine, which has passed from the magazine and booklet age or stage to a real book, contains more than 500 pages plus the advertising which has become in almost every magazine an interesting short story. Harper's staff has such names on it as Walter Lippman, Ford Maddox Ford, Oswald Garrison Villard, Silas Bent, and many others whose names are included in the popular writers of the day.

pledged for the building of a new national life in Palestine are responsible for opening the division.

Mr. Cuba graduated from Commercial High school in 1926. He is now a sophomore at the Georgia Tech evening school of commerce.

Mr. Cuba is a charter member and was twice president of the Moseans club, organized in Atlanta four years ago for literary, social and athletic interests, and since grown into a national organization. He is also a member of the Ahavath Achim Bible class.

NORTH CAROLINA MILL WORKERS RETURN TO JOBS

Henderson, N. C., September 10.—(AP)—With the energies of eight hundred men and women who, on August 4, walked out of the four Harriet mills at South Henderson in demand for a 12 1-2 per cent wage increase, again turned practically 100 per cent toward production, a bitter wage war in which both passive protest and violent actions have played a part, was today regarded as virtually ended.

The few remaining workers who held out following the return Tuesday of nearly all the operatives went back to their jobs in peace today. A few who continue to hold out and an additional small number who have left Henderson to seek work elsewhere are all that remain away from the Harriet spindles, officials said.

Last night was quiet in the mill village. A special patrol of deputy sheriffs established three days ago by Sheriff D. L. Kearns continued to tread the village streets, and mill property but have reported no disturbances. Mill officials and civil authorities generally predict no further trouble.

VIRGINIA DAUGHTER TO WED IN FEBRUARY

Richmond, Va., September 10.—(AP)—Mr. and Mrs. James Branch Cabell, of Richmond, today announced the engagement of their daughter, Grace Guerrant Shepherd, to Wirt Peebles Marks, Jr., also of Richmond. The wedding will take place in February. Both are popular in the younger social set of Virginia.

QUITMAN METHODISTS HOLD FALL MEETING

Quitman, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Representatives of the Quitman Methodist church here had a very profitable and enjoyable meeting at the Quitman Country club last night. M. H. Haygood, chairman of the board of stewards, presided, and those discussing the various problems and activities of the church were L. W. Branch, M. M. Haygood, Sam T. Harrell, Brantley Baum and the pastor, Rev. W. F. Smith.

Enthusiasm and interest marked the gathering and it was agreed to hold a similar meeting once each quarter. It was resolved unanimously that all the financial pledges and obligations of the church should be met in full before the annual conference at Valdosta in November.

Big Peanut Yield.

Arlington, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—R. O. McNair, of Arlington, reports the largest yield of peanuts here so far this season, having made four tons on a three and one-half-acre tract. He made the yield without the use of fertilizer.

Giant Mastodon Tooth Uncovered In South Georgia

A giant mastodon tooth, washed to the surface of a gully in Camden county, has been sent to Dr. S. W. McCallie, state geologist, recalling, he says, an age of drastic climatic and geological changes occurring in the United States during the pleistocene, or glacial age.

"It is the tooth of a giant mastodon, an animal similar to the elephant, which, with the mammoth and other members of the elephant family, evidently roamed Georgia in the pleistocene age," Dr. McCallie says.

The tooth, petrified by thousands of years of chemical action beneath the earth, is only partially intact. The remains of the animals, which evidently died because of climatic changes, were washed towards the sea by rivers, and are found generally in that section extending from Ebenezer, southward to Jesup, Waycross, and to a point near Fargo, all of which once were along the coast line of Georgia, Dr. McCallie says. The sites of such Georgia cities as Savannah, Darien and Brunswick were in the glacial age many fathoms below the Atlantic, as were the sea islands along the coast, including Cumberland, Jekyl and St. Simons, he says.

"In the early part of the period, the Atlantic coast line in Georgia was 40 to 60 miles farther inland than at present," Dr. McCallie says. "The northwestern part of the United States was covered with ice, extending down as far as Ohio," he says.

In Three Years, Morris Company Attains Outstanding Place as Builders of Homes

F. P. MORRIS AND GEORGE J. MORRIS

The real estate possibilities of Atlanta are revealed with the phenomenal success attained by F. P. and George J. Morris, in the residential field, building and selling homes.

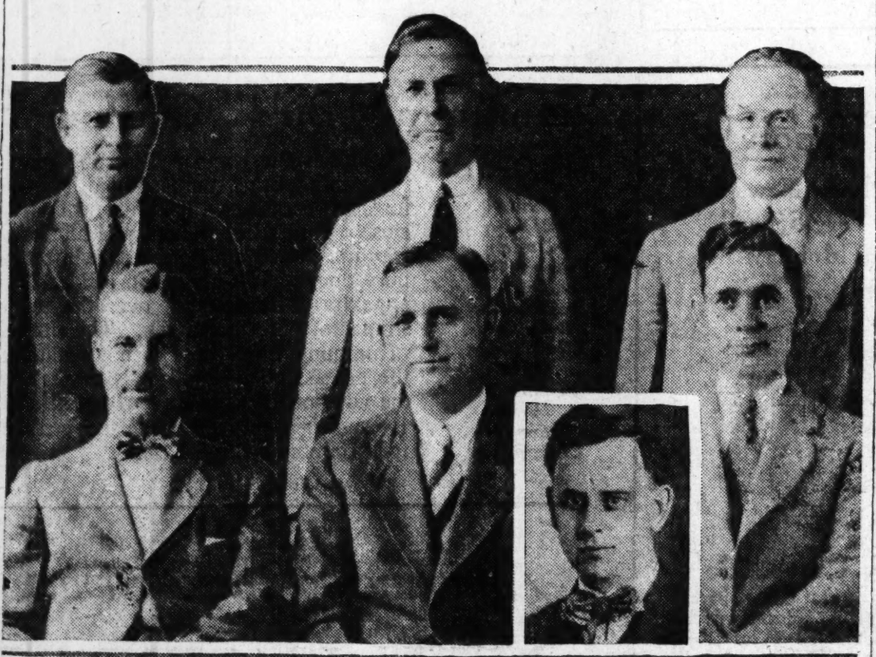

Starting with the construction of 10 homes during the first year of the present organization, in 1924, activities of the company have been expanded to require a building program for 1927 of nearly 70 residences, at a cost of $560,000. To date the Morris construction program included 46 completed bungalows at a cost of $365,650.

The two brothers, F. P. and George J. Morris, have been identified with real estate activities for the past six or seven years. They have gained recognition throughout this section as leaders in the field of developing residential property. Starting under the present style of F. P. and George J. Morris, they opened on April 6, 1924, in a single small office in the Candler building, with one salesman. The firm now has a luxurious suite of offices on the ground floor at 76-78 North Pryor street, with a personnel of 85 persons, including the building crew of more than 60 men.

The company has always specialized in building and selling dwellings. In 1924 it built 10 homes, in 1925, 18 homes, 36 in 1926 and 46 so far this year, with at least 20 more to be completed before the end of 1927. Of these 20, six are now under construction. Of all the homes built and sold the records of the company show that there has never yet been a foreclosure and that original purchasers still occupy all but two of the homes, while the two that have been resold brought the original owners a profit.

Particular expansion of the organization was shown this year with the addition of three new departments, an insurance department, mortgage loan department and renting and leasing department. Featuring the real estate activities of the Morris company is the convenience afforded by one concern handling every item concerned with the acquisition of a home—starting with purchase of the lot, there follows, building of the home to order, financing it through sale on terms like rent, placing of fire insurance and the handling of all minor contract details.

Eight alert salesmen, comprising the sales force of F. P. and George J. Morris, are credited by officials of that firm with a large portion of their success in building and selling homes.

This staff, headed by H. F. Anderson, sales manager, consists of W. H. Boswell, S. W. Bacon, Jr., J. D. Brown, E. B. Casey, Golden Pickett, L. B. Hudson and William P. Oliver. While specializing in residential sales, these men have acquired knowledge of the local homes market and technique beneficial to their clients as well as the company.

Mr. Boswell entered the real estate field four years ago, when he came to Atlanta. For the majority of this period he has been with Morris brothers and has helped establish their policy of satisfying home-seekers.

S. W. Bacon, Jr., has been in the real estate business for an equal length of time and with the Morris firm for two years. Mr. Bacon specializes in selling building contracts. A notable feature of the Morris business is encountered in building homes to order, with each detail planned to suit the client. The purchaser contracts for the home that he has approved after checking the architect's drawings. The desired dwelling is then erected with accuracy from the approved plans.

J. D. Brown has made a record for himself as a salesman of exceptional merit since coming with Morris one and a half years ago. He is originally from Nashville, Tenn., and came to Atlanta from Tampa, Fla., where his ability in the real estate field attracted the attention of the Morris brothers. Many of the houses throughout the city and in the suburbs, now bringing pleasure to customers of the company, were brought to the purchasers' attention by Mr. Brown.

E. B. Casey is the second real estate salesman employed by the Morris company when they began their expansion six years ago. Mr. Casey was originally of Birmingham, Ala. His six years' experience spent in the local real estate field has given him expert knowledge as a judge of homes and home values. Connected with Morris brothers from the early days of their career, Mr. Casey is an able exponent of the Morris policy in fair treatment of customers.

Golden Pickett has been with the company for more than three years. He started his career in real estate with this connection, building the career into a prosperous one while still maintaining the same connection. Mr. Pickett has sold many residences.

William P. Oliver has been making a remarkable record for the brief period of his association with Morris, which is six months. He has been active in real estate for a year. Previously he was with the Fourth National bank.

L. B. Hudson, who specializes in the sale of building contracts for Morris, is a man who knows the building industry from the "foundation to the gable." Mr. Hudson came to Atlanta two years ago from Greenville, S. C., where he was in business practically all his life. Since coming to Atlanta he has devoted his knowledge of the field to selling building contracts.

Another important figure in the Morris organization is F. R. Chandler. While not on the sales staff, he is responsible for many recent sales. Mr. Chandler is manager of the building department and has charge of the architectural work, drawing of plans and estimating. His skill is reflected in the homes being built by Morris. He has been identified with construction projects for more than ten years, having done considerable construction work for the government and more recently general superintendent of construction for the J. C. Penny foundation that has just completed the large ministers' memorial structure at Green Cove Springs, Fla.

HOPKINS PLANS FIVE BUNGALOWS ON BARNETT ST'

Erection of five brick bungalows in the attractive residential section of Barnett street, near Linwood place, at an aggregate cost of approximately $25,000, is the construction program recently undertaken by P. B. Hopkins and Son, well-known builders, according to announcement Saturday by P. B. Hopkins. Three of the homes are now under way.

"We recently purchased three lots on Barnett street, near Linwood place, and are now erecting three thoroughly modern Hopkins-style bungalows at a cost of approximately $12,000," Mr. Hopkins stated. "We expect to construct two more homes in this vicinity immediately, at a total cost of $20,000 to $25,000. We are looking forward to general prosperity and a banner year for our own concern. To date this year we have sold structures amounting to more than $100,000 and every bungalow built by us this year has been sold."

STOKES AVENUE PROJECT STARTS

Development of Stokes avenue, in West End Park, between Gordon street and Cascade avenue, is the newest undertaking of F. P. and George J. Morris. The company recently opened a new section containing 65 lots and have started a construction program of 30 bungalows at an aggregate cost of $240,000.

On the north side of the street, containing 30 lots, the building development of the Morris company to be carried out, while the south side is held for sale exclusively through Morris. The concern has already completed five bungalows, four of which were sold before finished and are now occupied. Another home is now under construction on a lot sold by Morris. The program to build 30 bungalows is to be carried into effect within a year. In addition to the five completed, six more dwellings will be started during the next 10 days.

West End Park has had a phenomenal development since its original purchase in 1909 by William J. Davis from the Ontario Land company. The convenience of its location is one of the reasons for its popularity today. It is within three block of the Lucile Avenue grammar school and easily accessible to Joe Brown Junior High school; it is convenient to community stores and four or five churches, and it is half way between the Whitehall-Peachtree car line and the Lucile avenue car line. The new section was recently opened with paved streets, curbing, sewers, water and all other street improvements.

W. P. WALTHALL ANNOUNCES SALES BY ADAIR COMPANY

Small sales recently made by salesmen of the Adair Realty & Loan Co. and not heretofore reported were announced Saturday by W. P. Walthall, manager.

A brick bungalow on Glen Iris drive, owned by P. B. Hopkins, was sold to Walter Hunter for $7,000, this sale being handled by H. E. Craig. Mr. Craig also handled the sales of 1279 Dellwood drive, in Haynes Manor, a new house built by Norris Construction Co., and sold to Alva G. Maxwell for $15,250 cash. Another sale handled by H. E. Craig and E. L. Miller was the residence of O. R. Randall, former NuGrape official, a two-story, brick house on Braircliff road, in Druid Hills, which was sold to Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Woods for $17,700.

Other sales made by the Adair agency are as follows: A bungalow, at 1437 Braircliff road, owned by Druid Hills, sold to Frank W. Harrison for $10,000. The transaction was handled by E. M. Chapman. Mr. Chapman also handled the sale of a lot on Wesley avenue, purchased by H. D. Kahrs, which brought $8,000 cash.

A new brick bungalow, at 849 Mentelle drive, in Glendale Terrace, was sold by H. C. Badders to E. L. DuPree for $8,500, the transaction being handled by N. J. Wooding, Jr. A building lot in the Nunnally subdivision was sold by the Woodland compay to Mrs. Fannie Thrasher, also handled by N. J. Wooding, Jr. A lot in Ansley Park, owned by M. S. Baker, Jr., was sold to James Shepherd, this transactions being handled by Cobb C. Torrance.

New Building Record Predicted in Nation By Atlanta Architect

G. Lloyd Preacher, president of G. Lloyd Preacher & Co., nationally known architects and engineers of Atlanta, Saturday predicted that 1927 will set a new record for building operations not only in the south, but throughout the entire country.

Predictions of the head of the architectural firm, who is the supervising architect for Atlanta's new schools and is designing other schools and municipal structures over the south, is based on actual statistics which have been received at his Atlanta office from leading centers of the nation.

Mr. Preacher, like most men of his profession, is conservative in all his statements and predictions. As a rule, his figures are not put down in the addition column until accurate information is obtained on contracts actually let.

"So far this year, taking into consideration the volume of engineering projects over the country, the total of construction operations is a record breaker," said Mr. Preacher. "It is appreciably greater than the volume established during the corresponding period of 1926, when all previous records were broken. It may truthfully be stated that the volume of construction operations now being carried on has never before been equaled."

Mr. Preacher said that for one month, that of July of the present year, the building figures had not been exceeded except in two instances—September, 1925, and July, 1926—in two years.

The Atlanta firm, which is handling large contracts in connection with Atlanta's building program under a $3,500,000 bond issue, also is designing many similar structures in various towns and cities of the country.

Efficient Office Workers

Female disciples of efficiency who handle the voluminous detail work of F. P. and George J. Morris. On the left is seen Miss Ruby Lee Bates, efficient stenographer, while across the way is Miss Grace Gormley, office aide. Miss Gormerly has been with the Morris organization for two years and her responsibility for handling the general office work has steadily advanced.

H. F. Anderson Is Appointed Morris Brothers' Sales Head

Appointment of H. F. Anderson as sales manager of the F. P. and George J. Morris organization marks one of the most recent steps in the progress of that concern.

The increased activity in home building and selling undertaken by the Morris brothers calls for a man of exceptional ability in the position of sales manager. Mr. Anderson has been with the firm for two years and his promotion to head of the sales staff pays high tribute to his efficiency in selling homes.

H. F. ANDERSON

As the chief concern of Morris is to satisfy the home purchaser it is obvious that Mr. Anderson has made this phase of his work a feature. Aided by his attractive personality and thorough knowledge of property values, his consistent success as a salesman has warranted the promotion just announced.

Mr. Anderson came to Atlanta in 1921, an expert auditor. He is a native of Stateboro, Ga. After two years of accounting work he became associated with the Mortgage Guarantee Company of America, first as auditor but later as manager of the loan department. Mr. Anderson started with the Mortgage Guarantee company when first organized and it was during the two years of his connection there that the company's sales of stocks grew from the initial sale to an average of $250,000 a month.

In the capacity of manager of the loan department for that company's extensive activities, Mr. Anderson acquired a knowledge of property values as exacting as only the position of loan department manager for a concern lending hundreds of thousands on real estate demands. About two years ago he left the mortgage company for a more direct contact with the realty sales field. Since then he has been in the sales organization of F. P. and George J. Morris.

Entering upon his duties as sales manager, Mr. Anderson foresees a continuation of prosperity for the Morris concern. "During my affiliation with Morris in the sales department I have never seen the company fail to forge ahead regardless of the general conditions of prosperity or adversity," he said. "Now that all business condition symptoms point towards increased prosperity throughout the south, there is no doubt but what our business will grow by leaps and bounds.

"Indication of the increasing activity in this field can already be seen in mounting inquiries regarding the building of homes from people purchasing lots. Another interesting trend pointing toward enhanced construction activity is the desire of the homeseeker for an expression of individuality in their residences. In this respect we are cooperating with the homeseeker to plan the home according to his taste. Even where we build dwellings in advance for sale we have taken advantage of the experience gained from clients of building contracts.

GIRLS' CLUB PLANS SHOW AT CHAMBLEE

Chamblee, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The Girls' 4-H club, of the R. J. Guinn school community is planning to hold an old-fashioned "county fair" in the Girls' clubhouse, Thursday, September 22, at 3 p. m.

There will be exhibits of canned products, sewing and all kinds of fancy work put on by the girls and women of the community.

There will also be plenty of amusement, it is stated.

There will be no admission fee. The public is invited.

The Girls' 4-H club is an organization for young girls of the rural sections.

3 NEW DEPARTMENTS ADDED TO MORRIS CO.

Expansion of the F. P. and George J. Morris organization to include three new departments, making one of the most thoroughly rounded residential real estate firms of this section, has recently been accomplished.

The new departments are renting and leasing, insurance, and mortgage loan. Handling the activities of the renting and leasing department will be Marvin Anderson, brother of the sales manager for Morris, H. F. Anderson.

Marvin Anderson came to Atlanta from Statesboro, Ga., a year ago. He has completed a course at the Southern Business college and is entering the real estate profession through the renting department of F. P. and George J. Morris.

The insurance department was added about six months ago and is now reported to be doing a handsome business. The loan department is just 30 days old and was put in to satisfy the obvious demand for such a department.

Fine Record Achieved By Ernest L. Miller Of Adair Sales Firm

Ernest L. Miller, of the Adair sales agency, specializing in medium priced homes and investment property, has made a good record for the past month or two. Some of the sales completed by Mr. Miller are as follows:

A group of West End lots belonging to a development company was sold to George C. Rogers for $2,250; one of the lots fronting on Donnelly avenue was resold to R. F. Cox for $750, and other lot fronting on White street was resold to Dr. A. H. Cochran for $450.

A house and lot at 426 Holderness street, owned by C. G. Park, was sold to a customer for $5,000; another house at 1271 Greenwich avenue, S. W., was sold for $5,500.

A bungalow at 1671 South Gordon street, owned by Atlanta Banking and Savings company, was sold to L. A. Park for $7,550.

A lot on Morningside drive, owned by A. F. Gardner was sold for $2,200.

A bungalow at 356 Inman street, S. W., owned by Mrs. J. T. Carter, was sold for $4,250.

A lot on Sherwood road, owned by Fulton National bank, was sold to H. C. Turner for $1,700.

An investment parcel consisting of renting property located on the corner of Berean avenue and Gaskill street, near Fulton Bag and Cotton mills, was sold by Mrs. Stella Falcon to Isaac and Nathan Sinkovitz for $3,275.

Mr. Miller specializes in West End homes and south side property and is thoroughly informed as to selling values in this field. Mr. Miller states that he has numerous other customers in the market for worth-while, medium priced homes. He finds that he can sell practically all that are offered on a real value basis.

Boyd White Attains High Sales Record Despite Absence

Boyd F. White, winner of the trip to the Seattle, Wash., convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards offered by the Adair Realty and Loan company to the member of its housing division making the best record for the past year, recently returned from the cross-continent tour. In spite of his absence for nearly the entire month, Mr. White has reported active business in realty sales. The list follows:

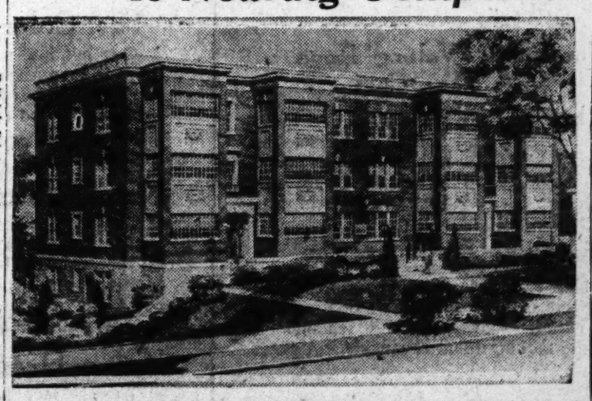

Investment property on the corner of Myrtle street and Box alley, owned by L. N. Taylor and sold to L. M. Rural for $3,150 cash; a lot on Sixth street, owned by Glendale Terrace, was sold to B. W. Nichols for $2,500.

Fourteen lots in Glendale Terrace being the entire remaining unsold property in this subdivision, were sold to J. B. Richardson for $26,600.

The former home of V. H. Kriegshaber, a large two-story brick dwelling on the corner of Moreland and Austin avenues, was sold by Central Leases, Inc., to the Methodist Protestant church for $15,000 cash.

A building lot on Holderness street, owned by Mrs. P. G. Bailey, was sold to O. M. Latta for $1,400. A residence at 819 Juniper street, former home of John N. McCullough, was sold for Mrs. T. H. Adair to Miss Mary Ryan for $15,000. As part payment Miss Mary Ryan transferred her house, 225 Fifth street, N. E., at a consideration of $9,000.

Collier Road Apartment Is Nearing Completion

Architect's drawing of the first unit of the twin cooperative apartments being built by H. W. Belfor Realty Development company at the intersection of Collier and Wycliff roads. The 12-family structure is now well advanced toward completion, while the second unit, to be erected across the street, will be started shortly.

Erection of the Merrell and Meredith, twin apartment houses to be offered to the public on the cooperative ownership plan, is now under way on Collier road, between Peachtree and Wycliff roads. The project represents an investment of $165,000, involving two three-story structures with room for 24 families. The announcement is made by H. W. Belfor, builder.

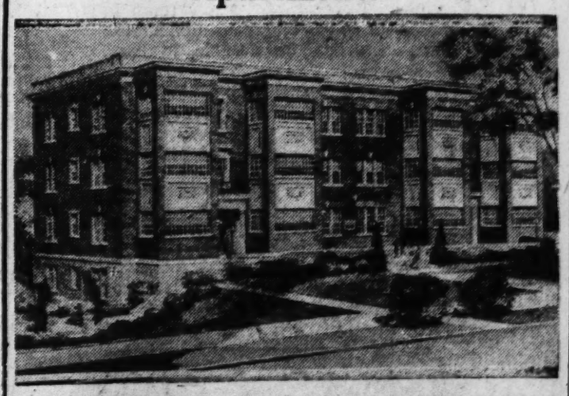

The first unit is now under roof and will be completed about November 1. The developers intend to offer this unit for rent, giving the tenants an option to purchase the individual apartments under the cooperative plan, the terms being, $1,000 initial payment with subsequent payments in the form of rent of $90 per month for nine years. At the expiration of this period the tenant will own his apartment free of indebtedness.

The individual apartments are to be replicas of a six-room model bungalow recently constructed by Mr. Belfor on Vedado way. They are to contain a living room, sun parlor, Murphy bed, dressing room, bedroom, dining room, kitchen, tile bath and service porch, with electric refrigerator, garbage incinerator and individual fire-proof garage.

The coperative ownership feature is relatively a new departure for Atlanta. In New York it is estimated that there are over 5,000 cooperative apartment buildings and in Chicago there are many such structures.

COOLIDGE SPEEDS HOMEWARD BOUND

President Coolidge's Special Train, En Route to Washington, September 10.—(AP)—Leaving with South Dakota, the state of his summer residence, a message of the high purpose of education, President Coolidge headed eastward into Minnesota today on his return to the white house.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE IS GIVEN DEGREE.

Brookings, S. D., September 10.—(AP)—President Coolidge arrived here at 9:30 a. m., where he made an address on education at the dedication of the Lincoln Memorial library of the South Dakota State college. He left the special train carrying him to Washington to proceed at once by automobile to the campus for the exercises.

Escorting President and Mrs. Coolidge on their journey through South Dakota were Senator and Mrs. Norbeck, who boarded the train at Rapid City last night and attended the dedication of the Lincoln Memorial library at the South Dakota State college at Brookings with them. Representative Johnson of that state and George W. Wright, republican state chairman, rode on the special train from Huron to Brookings, heading a delegation of Huron citizens, including A. A. Chamberlain, Leo Temmey, Dr. H. D. Sewell, Charles Warren, Charles H. J. Mitchell and the Rev. Bert Ketell.

Mr. Coolidge was given the honorary degree of doctor of science from the college.

BAD MONEY SUSPECTS CLEARED AND FREED

New Orleans, September 10.—(AP) Five persons arrested at Springville last night by the Livingstone parish sheriff were freed today after an investigation by C. K. Langham, operating chief of federal secret service men in New Orleans, had shown they were not implicated in the alleged countrfeiting and bootleg operations being investigated in New Orleans.

Langham characterized the arrests as unwarranted. After interviewing the five and inspecting the money on their persons, he pronounced the currency genuine, and the quintet was ordered released.

The five gave their names as J. N. Meek, Tyler, Texas; Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Campbell, Miss Helen Campbell and W. H. Nix, all of San Antonio.

ALEXANDER ANALYZES BUSINESS SITUATION

BY MAGNUS W. ALEXANDER.
President of the National Conference Board.

New York, September 10.—(AP)—Competition is making itself felt in American industry today to such a degree that, while activity has been reaching steadily higher levels, many branches of industry are complaining that theirs is a profitless prosperity. Since the end of 1925, especially, the competitive struggle has been increasing and at present the insolvency record is at the high level it reached as the result of the 1920-1921 depression. Despite our steadily increasing volume of business, it is a fact that in recent years about two our of every five manufacturing corporations have either made no profit or have operated at a loss.

It is a matter of general observation in trade circles that in the fight for volume, for greater and greater sales, much business is taken at a low profit and that often sales are made below cost. This raises the highly important question whether it is economically sound and socially desirable that goods be sold over periods of time whether without profit or at a loss simply to maintain or increase sales volume.

The effect of the increasingly keen competitive struggle is reflected in an analysis of the income tax returns of the federal government, which shows that during the period from 1920 to 1925, an average of 41.5 per cent of manufacturing corporations operated without profit or at a loss. The average net income of more than 99 per cent of them, that is, all those with net income of less than $5,000,000 a year in 1925, which was considered a "banner" year, was nearly 1,1 per cent smaller than in 1923, the last previous "good" year.

During the war the word "profiteer" was coined. It described and held up to scorn the man or organization that, taking advantage of conditions, sold goods at prices unfairly above what they were worth, thereby making an exorbitant profit. Perhaps the time has come when likewise we should hold up to scorn the "deficiteer," the man or organization that, to swell sales to greater and greater totals for a consecutive period of time, sells goods at a price below what the commodity is fairly worth, or even below production cost.

HAMMOND HOME TO STAGE FAIR NEXT SATURDAY

A community fair and carnival will be staged by the members of the Hammond Home Demonstration club at Sandy Springs next Saturday, September 17, between the hours of 2 o'clock in the afternoon and 10:30 o'clock that night.

The club has been functioning for approximately a year and was organized for the purpose of the betterment of the community at Sandy Springs.

A carnival will be staged in connection with the fair which will consist of a black face minstrel show, and side shows. Refreshment will be served.

Members of the club are requested to bring their exhibits, consisting of canned goods, needle work, farm products and other articles which they desire to enter to the fair on the morning of the 17th so that they may be arranged before the fair begins. There will be no admission charge.

5 TIMES DIVORCED, SIOUX CITY WOMAN WILL MARRY AGAIN

Sioux City, Iowa, September 10. (AP)—Five times married and five times divorced, Mrs. Flossie Lane, 21-year-old Sioux City woman, still believes in the institution of marriage.

She obtained her fifth divorce yesterday and then announced that she expected to marry again.

She was married the first time when only 12 years old.

Shanghai, September 10.—K. M. Crawley, claiming to be a prominent San Francisco club man, residing in the Piedmont area, was arrested today and released on $4,000 bail by the United States authorities on a charge of defrauding Yang Sen, Szechwan militarist, of $40,000 gold. A preliminary hearing developed that Crawley and a Swiss citizen named Ely Wideller sold Yang Sen a large number of bullet-proof vests imported from America for the purpose of enabling Yang Sen to resist the nationalists' bullets in the upper Yangtze battling.

The deal also included a large stock of ammunation, but the nationalists have refused to permit the shipment to proceed up the Yangtze to reach the enemy.

Wideller, who previously was engaged in arms dealings on the upper Yangtze, was captured by Yang Sen and held prisoner several months in 1922. He recently went to the United States in cooperation with Crawley and obtained the agency and patent for armor-plated vests, and they have been doing a big business selling them to the Chinese military factions.

CENTRAL FIGURE IN CALIFORNIA OIL FRAUD GIVES UP

San Francisco, September 10.—(AP) The Examiner says that Jack Bennett, alias Jacob Berman, alleged "key man" in the state's investigation of the collapse of the Julian Petroleum corporation, has secretly surrendered to Los Angeles officers here and is expected to aid in the recovery of a large amount of money lost by stockholders.

Bennett, under indictment in Los Angeles, is charged with failure to account for $34,000,000 while he was in charge of promotion work for the corporation which failed after a huge over-issue of stock.

The paper says Bennett told of touring Europe since he disappeared several months ago, and that he recenily visited his wife in New York while she was being watched in an effort to locate him.

Don't Let 'Em Beat You To It!

Too late!

It's rather an uncomfortable feeling, isn't it, when the agent shouts these words at you and you gaze at the midnight train rounding the curve toward the city?

Midnight at a country station. No more trains and a two-mile walk back to the village hostelry.

If this certain traveler had read the railroad schedule more closely—he'd have been there on time.

Don't let some Atlanta resident shout "Too Late" at you when you inquire about some choice bargain offered for sale in The Constitution's classified section.

Read those classified ads just as closely as any traveler reads his railroad schedule and you won't have to see the splendid offers of The Constitution snatched up by persons who get to the given addresses before you do.

AN EIGHT MONTHS RE
Satisfaction in E
Representing $365,650.00

Among the outstanding factors that attest to the faithful adherence of the city's well-earned slogan, "Forward Atlanta," are the real estate home projects which have been directed by F. P. & Geo. J. Morris.

Every city is proud to boast of her building achievements for they are the true gauges for comparison of the development, growth, progress and prosperity everywhere and the splendid record of this concern in contributing the 46 completed homes in eight months time is significant of the faith that Atlantans have in the satisfactory manner in which we handle each transaction. In every worth-while section of Atlanta there is a standing example of our achievement—and a living example of the satisfied, happy home owners.

This organization has in the past three and a half years grown from its original found-

CONSTRUCTION DEPARTMENT OFFERS EVERY FACILITY FOR QUALITY BUILDING

To complete every requirement of the prospective home owner, the building department is organized on a most comprehensive scale. The department is composed of more than 70 employees and workmen, all directly under our supervision and ready to fulfill the most intricate and exacting plans of clients. This building service is a decided inducement as it involves the removal of all unnecessary and annoying details that owners wish to avoid. For each requirement we are held entirely responsible and a well earned proof of our capability is in the satisfactory testimony of the 46 home owners who have partaken of our service during the past eight months.

ers, F. P. and Geo. J. Morris, to 12 skilled and highly esteemed characters in the real estate field, exclusive of the construction and building departments.

The extensive phases of service of this organization have kept pace with the demands of the growing clientele and today our method of serving you lies in the laying of original plans, choice of location, selection of type of home, financing so that regular monthly notes will be lower than rent; a general sales department, renting, leasing, loans, insurance, and home building.

All these departments of unlimited information are at your command; and those who will take advantage of them will find the way of acquiring the home of their dreams—just as did the 46 home-owners who have experienced the conscientious, sincere and unfailing service that we offer.

WE WILL BUILD YOU A HOME LIKE YOU WANT---
Our Financing Plan Allows You To Pay For It Like Rent

Our building department will gladly show you how it is possible to own the home you have dreamed of and will arrange payments in a manner that will be as easy to pay as rent.

Our special plan of financing has shown the way to hundreds of satisfied home owners and it can do for you exactly what it has accomplished for them.

Why delay the opportunity when the owning of real estate means progress, advancement and a better standing in the community, and actual dollars of investment built up into a splendid home of your own.

Phone us today—a consultation will cost you nothing and will be a revelation of information.

You can buy this without withdrawing much cash from active business:

Pay in cash	$ 3,000
Loan due within 5 years, 6½% semi-annual interest	28,000
TOTAL PURCHASE PRICE	$31,000

This is a 2-story brick and concrete building, having about 17,000 square feet of floor space. It will possibly require an additional outlay to adapt the building to a specific use; but after this is done and the first payment made, leasing troubles are over.
The location is central, making it suitable for almost any line; the value is unquestioned.

THE WORLD IN PROTEST.

With the Carling added to the great airplanes missing over the silent spaces of the Atlantic, following close upon the similar fates of the Old Glory and of the St. Raphael, the whole world is aroused in protest against further proposed trans-oceanic flights until the science of long-distance aviation has been made less hazardous by more perfect development.

Within the last few weeks no less than 18 splendid men and women of two continents have sacrificed their lives to their ambitions to conquer great oversea distances in land planes not built for sea voyages.

First were the two daring aces from France who attempted the western flight from Europe to the American shores. The mysteries of unmarked graves, perhaps in the ocean and maybe in the Newfoundland wilds, will perhaps never be unfolded as to their fates.

Then came the successful trans-Atlantic flights of Colonel Lindbergh and of Chamberlin and of Commander Byrd.

Then followed quickly the tragedies of the Pacific in which seven lives, one a courageous young woman, found resting places on the bottom.

And then our own Redfern—lost maybe in the Caribbean, and maybe in the South American jungles—but lost!

Then in quick succession came the ill-fated expeditions of the St. Raphael, with an aged princess as a passenger, followed by the ill-fated Old Glory and then by the Carling.

Canada is taking steps to put a stop to such gambles with death.

All of Europe is aroused.

America is aroused.

In the name of humanity it must be stopped.

Also a popular feature of "gypsy flying" in this country must be stopped or rigidly regulated.

Two splendid young Tennesseeans, one a Memphis attorney and business man, the other a member of the aerial squadron at Nashville, were instantly killed last week on a "nose dive" near Armstrong field, in the outskirts of Memphis.

Not only is the list of the missing in long non-stop, and especially trans-oceanic flying, becoming alarming as to the future development of commercial aviation, but the death toll from local flying is becoming appalling.

The reason is obvious. The mania for flying has reached such a point that any old, antequated plane is brought into service, without inspection. With such junk the perils of the air are astoundingly large and severe.

The demand for a thorough system of government regulation of all planes, whether large or small, built for long distance or short distance flying, is imperative.

Every state should have a licensing system. No pilot should be permitted to go into the air, either alone or with passengers, without having qualified as to experience, and as to mental and temperamental fitness.

No antequated flivver with wings, and a motor fit only for an iron scrapheap, should be permitted to fly, or rather to attempt to fly.

Every plane, after a satisfactory inspection, should be registered in the state's motor vehicle department.

Supplementary to state licensing and regulation there should be required a federal control system.

The operator of a stationary engine, riveted to its foundations, must be licensed.

No person would dare trust life on a train, the locomotive at the head of which is operated by an inexperienced and unlicensed engineer.

The train is supposed to move on a track, built adequately for the purpose. The sky is trackless.

The crashing of a plane to the ground, or to water, means almost certain death. The percentage is fully 90 to 10.

The development of aviation means too much to modern progress, to facilitating business, to the conservation of time, to national defense, to have it jeopardized by air gypsies, and by ambitious aviators who deliberately fly into the jaws of almost certain death to gratify ambitions.

Courage and personal bravery are commendable traits of character, but when impelled by reckless impulse they defy the rules of common sense and judgment.

That is why rigid regulation is necessary.

THRILLING OLD-NEW HISTORY.

The Constitution is publishing today, in its rotogravure section, two pages of illustrations from photographs of the ruins of many of the old Spanish missions and arsenals that dot the sea islands of the Georgia coast.

These photographs were taken recently by a staff photographer under the personal direction of Miss Mary Ross, a native of Brunswick, and now a member of the faculty and the library staff of the University of California.

Miss Ross is the greatest living authority on the Spanish occupation of Georgia antedating General Oglethorpe, and on the more than century old struggle between the Anglo-Saxons and the Spaniards for the title to the Georgia lands. At that time, before Spain was finally driven from all of her possessions east of the Mississippi, the land between the St. Marys and Port Royal, incorporating the large group of Georgia sea islands, and the hinterland back to the Mississippi was claimed by Spain as a part of the province of La Florida and administered from San Augustin (St. Augustine) which was the capital.

Miss Ross, in conjunction with the picture display today, contributes a graphic, thrilling story of the occupation of Georgia by the Spaniards from 1556 to the decisive battle of Bloody Marsh, on St. Simons island, in which General Oglethorpe drove the Spaniards back to the St. John river, and from which defeat they never recovered. The treaty of territorial surrender shortly followed.

It is not merely an authentic summary of a period of a hundred years or more of white occupation of Georgia prior to the arrival of the Oglethorpe colony, but it is thrilling history that while old is new, for few people realize that the written history of Georgia, following the legends of the Indian forests, does not begin with the arrival of the Anne at Yammacraw in 1733. In the great, bloody struggles that followed the dynamic Spanish rule of the vast territory of Gaule, beginning in the 16th century, there is history of romance, of tragedy, of Spanish missionary influence, that reads almost like fiction.

In connection with Miss Ross' splendid summary Mr. Hollomon of our editorial staff has reviewed in detail the recently published volume of Professor Bolton, of the University of California, entitled "Spain's Title to Georgia," and in which he analyzes the very important documents of Arredondo, setting up Spain's claim to the Georgia land.

Miss Ross, of Georgia, collaborated in this work, and the author gives her credit for being the outstanding authority on the history of Georgia's Spanish occupation.

TWO PARTIES NEEDED.

Basing its argument largely upon the distressing political situation that exists in Georgia, referring specifically to an editorial that recently appeared in the Valdosta Times and other Georgia papers, the Manufacturers Record makes an earnest editorial plea for two political parties in each state.

In this connection, in the course of a long, analytical editorial, it says:

"This country has reached a period where no one party should be allowed by the people of a state so completely to dominate its politics as to develop a rottenness which exists in many states, north as well as south. Men must begin to appreciate their individual responsibility to vote for the best man and not to vote for a bad man simply because he happens to be a nominee of their party.

"It is good to see that the Georgia papers are beginning to oppose the hot political fights within their own party."

We have always contended that Georgia should have a strong, aggressive white republican party so that party issues might become the problems of controversy rather than personal incriminations and recriminations between the ambitious of the democratic party who seek primary nominations.

The situation as it is incubates factionalisms that are destructive to state progress and to public welfare.

Georgia is a state of rare opportunities, of incomparable climate and soil, of great undeveloped resources, of a natural wealth unequalled by any other state of the southeast. But it is folly to say it has not been retarded, or is not being retarded, by political factionalism between members of a single party.

Two parties that could compete vigorously for votes on party grounds—on the wisdom of platform tenets—would give a new impetus to Georgia progress. It would mark a new day in Georgia development. It would dissolve factionalism to a large extent. It would heal old wounds. It would mean a new day of understandings.

MR. ALLEN'S PARK GIFT.

One of the most historic spots in Georgia is Fort Mountain, in Walker county. The ancient fortress has a 1,500-foot barrier surrounding it.

It shows building skill in its construction. There is a complete absence within and around the fortress of any of the Indian relics. That it was built as a barricade against hostile tribes, either then existing or contemplated, is very evident. That it was built by the Spaniards centuries before the advent of General Oglethorpe into the history of Georgia is obvious.

The most reasonable theory is that it was constructed by DeSoto and his followers, who are known to have prospected for gold in that section for several months in 1540 and 1541.

This mountain is the property of Ivan Allen, prominent business man and civic leader of Atlanta. He now proposes 50 acres on the summit, incorporating the historic fort, to the state of Georgia for a state park. It is a generous and commendable proposal.

The state of Georgia has another park recently deeded to it in the heart of the Blue Ridge, and on the Appalachian paved highway at Neel's Gap. It was recently formally accepted by state officials with fitting ceremonies. This new proposed park site should be so accepted. And it should be named "Allen State Park."

The next legislature should make adequate provisions for the proper maintenance of its state parks. Other states give careful and jealous attention to their state parks, usually administered under a state park commission.

PEAK CAR LOADINGS.

Loading of revenue freight is making a peak record for the year. Statistics just made available show that 1,109,225 cars rolled with commerce during the week ending August 27. This was an increase of 42,589 cars over the preceding week. It was the top record for 1927.

While the figures for the past week are not available it is assumed that the loadings continue on the increase for the reason that winter merchandise shipments are now moving at a rapid rate.

Miscellaneous freight loading for the week of August 27 totaled 416,857 cars, an increase of 3,233 cars above the corresponding week of 1926 and 2,789 cars above the same week in 1925.

This is a most healthful business indication, and shows the general prosperity of the country. The movement of grain also showed a heavy increase—another indication of prosperity, although western grain prices are not satisfactory to the producers.

While the railroads are doing a tremendous volume of business in revenue freight, and general securities are almost on a bullish rampage, the fact remains that the carriers continue their effort to edge up on commodity rates, and especially in less than car-lot shipments. We have pointed out before the economic as well as the psychological folly of this course. It is dangerous ground to roll on.

IS FRANCE DISCRIMINATING?

It is almost inconceivable that France, with her war debt still unpaid, or even adjusted as to future payments, and with her commercial interests profiting to a greater degree from the purses of American tourists than any other nation in Europe, should legalize a practical, discriminating embargo against a number of American manufactured commodities by a prohibitive import tariff.

Such is reported from Paris. The new levy, from four to six points higher than heretofore, or as now imposed against either England or Germany, has been in effect, according to dispatches, since September 1. If such reports are true, the discrimination is unjustifiable—and unfair.

France is in better financial condition than she has been in a generation prior to the war. She has enormous credit balances in gold and securities in the banks of London and New York. Her people are unusually prosperous on the tolls exacted of the tens of thousands of Americans who flock each season to the capital of the old battleground, and thence to the watering places and to the other show places of the nation.

The government's once low-ebbed credit has been reestablished. The franc has doubled in value in a year. The currency is becoming stabilized.

And yet, in the face of the friendly expression of Briand and of Foch and of other of the federal and military leaders, the government, it is reported, seeks to tear down American trade in many popular lines, including electrical goods, cutlery, clothes making goods, etc., and in which American manufacturers have heretofore had a large trade on a tariff basis of parity with other nations.

If France erects a tariff wall against imports, however high it may, this nation has no right to enter a protest. America has also a tariff wall, but it does have the virtue of standing the same height to all nations alike. There is no discrimination.

This new tariff, it is reported, is directed against America for the specific purpose of taking America out of trade competition. If so, it is wholly wrong.

Washington officials, it is reported, are hopeful of a treaty that will eliminate discrimination. It is unthinkable, even as a matter of normal international trade relations, that such a discrimination, if true, as alleged, exists.

DECATUR'S "HOTEL CANDLER."

Decatur's splendid new hotel, a modernly-appointed fire-proof brick hostelry, will be formally opened Monday evening with a dinner and reception. Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Sloan, the lessees, and the Community Hotel corporation will be the hosts, assisted by the Decatur Chamber of Commerce, the Atlanta Hotel Men's association and the Decatur Woman's club.

The hotel was named in honor of Walter Candler, whose public spirit and enterprise contributed largely to the successful financing of the ownership corporation. A large number of Decatur's citizens, who have shown a most aggressive and commendable activity for many months in the development of that city, and in all worth-while civic activities, are associated with Mr. Candler in the holding corporation.

Decatur is doing big things in a big way. It has a live and progressive trade organization. It has a beautiful and well equipped new public library, and many city improvement extensions are being made. The citizens who live in Decatur take a pride in their home city and are inspired by the spirit of Atlanta.

This new hotel is an improvement long needed. That need has now been met in a worthy way.

CAPITAL FOLLOWS PAVING.

The impetus that a permanently paved highway gives to high-type land settlement and development is emphasized in a story that comes out of Quitman, in Brooks county.

A. C. Legg, a large sausage manufacturer of Birmingham, had been looking for a suitable farm for intensive development, and for the equally intensive production of peppers and sage to be used in his own factories. At the same time he proposed to make this farm his permanent home, thereby planning one of the finest country estates in the south.

Looking over Alabama, Florida and Georgia he centered upon a 140-acre tract in Brooks county, Georgia. But the highway in front of the tract, although a part of the state system, and leading through Thomas county on one side and through Colquitt on the other, was unpaved, and there seemed to be little hope of immediate paving in Brooks. Colquitt and Thomas were both going ahead on their links.

Rather than face the uncertainties of indefinite delays in permanently paving the Brooks link the Alabama-Florida home-seeker positively refused to budge an inch in the closing of the transaction, although it meant large investments and the finest of developments, until he had assurances that the highway would be permanently, and not temporarily, paved at once.

Finally the Brooks commissioners realized so forcefully that real rural development follows only along ribbons of permanent paving that they arranged the rights-of-way, and gave to the home-seeker who literally knocked at its door the necessary assurance. And Brooks will now pave its link. And the great estate of productivity will be built.

Thus is stressed a practical lesson, the force of which cannot be challenged. It ought to stir every citizen of Georgia to its full significance.

The great open spaces of Georgia, with her incomparable soil and climate, will never be developed until the state, with a unity of spirit and an impulse of enterprise, permanently paves the entire system of state highways.

And this can never be completed, in fully one-third of the gross area of the state, until the county-aid plan has been eliminated, and the state, with the sound capitalization of the motor taxes, assumes the duties and the responsibilities of her own job.

The Georgia merchant who followed his son to Jacksonville and had him arrested for making way with the day's receipts of the business, should be reported as going where his son and the profits went.

If automobile accidents continue to mount up we will have to stretch our imagination to register them as pleasure vehicles.

Probably Mayor Walker visited Venice to see how that city progressed on water.

Christian Principles Are Steadily Winning the People From Paganism

In the current press of the country—daily, weekly, monthly, and magazine—I find very constant statements, more or less carefully argued, that the immoralities and crime waves of our era are mainly chargeable to "the lack of religion," or the "lack of religious teaching" among the masses of the people. The alleged cause is phrased both ways above quoted.

If those judgments are correct, they impose a tremendously grave indictment upon the churches and clergy of the times.

But I, for one, do not believe that blanket indictment is properly charged. The great congeries of the churches are not derelict in holding forth the standards of a workable religious faith, and the far-flung rank and file of our evangelical ministry are not remiss in their endeavors of moral and religious suasion.

That there are occasional church units whose preachers have "gone wild" in doctrines is not deniable. That there are other preachers who, from swollen egoism or sheer laziness, have substituted "just preaching" for strong and courageous declaration of the vital truths of the gospel, is shameful enough. But all those are in the negligible fringe of the church universal and the millions of its unspotlighted apostles and adherents.

My Time To Be a Pessimist.

When a fellow reaches the age that folks begin to call him "venerable" he has come to his hour to be a pessimist. He is due then to look upon the whirling world around him and believe it is being drawn by the Devil down the vortex of the maelstrom of a thousand vices!

But nothing like that afflicts this old scout. Next Thursday, the 15th, will be the forty-second anniversary of my conversion right here in Atlanta and my efforts to live a Christian's life. During that much more than half of my seventy-six years I have traveled far and wide over the earth, spoken on moral and religious issues in every state of the union and in eighty-three per cent of all the counties of our republic.

In all those years and experiences I have seen too many religious reforms enacted and too many moral victories won, to have my blood tainted with a single drop of pessimism, or my spirit made droopy with a single degree of spiritual despair.

My God rules the world that He created and my Christ owns it in fee simple from His Father and mine.

The present state of Christian civilization compared with what the world's moralities were in the first century of the gospel era should convince any reader of history and honest judge of results that the spiritual state of mankind was never better than it is today.

That is my sedate judgment upon the facts fairly and fully reported from all the fields of Christendom.

The Dicta of Partial Observations.

Oh, yes; I know that some good old mourner's bench brother, after watching a gourd-headed sheik and a fuzzy little flapper sneaking drinks out of a flask at a cabaret table, and slinging suggestive slang and generally acting like looney marmosets, will tell the prayer meeting that the whole world is riding to Hades on a nonstop ticket. But those little devils that filled his eyes with horror and his soul with sorrow were only two, perhaps, in a hundred of the sober, clean and sensible rank and file of the growing up generation. Some wise and experienced chiefs of police declare the percentage of incorrigible moral derelicts to be in about that measure in the cities of the country.

That there has been a decline of home religious exercises, that family altars are rare, that parental authority is less in evidence, and that youthful freedom of action is far greater than in former generations, are all very obvious. Elder persons are prone to accept these facts as proofs that the people of today are degenerating in morals and becoming fatally corrupt spiritually.

But those things have no such effect upon me. I know that moral conditions generally are not nearly so bad as they were a quarter century ago and not half as bad as they were fifty years ago. I had active participation as newspaperman and public evangelist in both periods, and believe myself to be a competent witness.

Atlanta as an Example.

There are perfectly reliable men and women living in Atlanta this very morning who will corroborate my conclusions. They can remember the days when we had here about as "wide open" a town as there was on the map.

We had among prominent figures of the city some of the worst "bad men" in the south, several of whom had been tried for "murder" more than once, and whom the whole city feared.

We had 118 open barrooms that paid scarcely any heed to the laws made for their regulation and were patronized every minute in the day by hundreds and thousands of our citizens—among them governors, judges, lawyers, merchants and the social elect.

We had several of the largest wholesale liquor houses in the south and a flourishing brewery whose trucks did constant deliveries from daylight to dark.

We had trainloads of liquor and beer coming into the city every few days.

We had extensive and expensive gambling houses on Marietta, Decatur and Wall streets, run by some sons of the pioneers of the city, and their families were favorites in the most select social affairs of the community.

We had a notorious and popular "red light" district where the largest bagnios were owned by women whose names were almost household words throughout the city.

We had practically every feature of a "rotten Rome," and which we have not and would not tolerate in our present day.

Two Conflicting Views.

With reference to the work and influence of the churches is modern life there are two sharply conflicting views.

One is that the churches should, as of old, confine their labors to the cultivation of individual Christian life and the spread of the gospel through the mission fields of the world. That view obtains most largely with the adherents to traditions and with those moderns who resent cirticism of liberal customs of personal and social indulgence.

The other view is that the churches should not confine themselves wholly to Sunday school, pulpit and prayer meeting exercises, but should enter boldly and potentially into the fields of social service and persistently press the principles of Christian life and practice upon men and women in all the walks of current life.

The conflict between those two views is now on in American and British lands especially, with the prospect that the latter and larger view will ultimately win the day.

Christian principles make a larger and stronger showing in social, business, industrial and governmental life, here in America at least, than ever before in our history.

We Americans are becoming more Christian and less heathen every day!

Ice-Man Never Misses Metropolitan Performance—Saw Two Famous Bombings—"Sweet Adeline" in Court.

BY CHARLES J. ESTCOURT, Jr.

(Copyright, 1927, in all countries by North American Newspaper Alliance.)

New York, September 10.—Singing didn't cut any ice with the father of Tom McDermott, speaking both literally and figuratively, and therefore Tom, son of a long line of ice men who used to harvest from the lakes in winter, had no chance to train his baritone voice, and today is an ice man in Jersey City.

What of it? Only this. For 27 years Tom has scarcely missed a single performance—except matinee—at the Metropolitan opera house. Sounds incredible, but the fact is inscribed on the score of an orchestral fantasy, dedicated "To My Good Friend Tom McDermott" by James P. Dunn, also of Jersey City.

This composition, entitled "We," commemorates in sound the trans-Atlantic flight of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, and was played by the Philharmonic orchestra at the Lewisohn stadium for the first time.

The last time that Tom, who sits in the gallery, attracted public attention, was when he was dragged to the stage for a speech at a celebration of his favorite singer, Scotti. That was in 1924.

SATED WITH SYMPHONIES.

The common people are getting too derned highbrow.

During eight weeks the Philharmonic orchestra has played 33 different symphonies at the Lewisohn stadium to 300,000 listeners, a record for ten seasons.

These 300,000 listeners must be the common people, because the society editors insist that everybody of any consequence has been abroad or at any rate not here. Besides, as every temperamental conductor realizes to his grief, when empty bottles go bumping down the concrete terrace in the middle of a soft passage for muted strings the stadium audiences are drinking pop.

This complaint against the common people comes from regular music lovers, who get enough symphonies in the winter and would relish lighter tuneful things out-of-doors. They have actually dared to write, in letters to the newspapers, that the mighty ninth symphony of Beethoven is not what it is cracked up to be.

SAW BOTH BOMB EXPLOSIONS.

At the risk of setting the New York police on his trail, this chronicler of the curious makes bold to announce that Frank Mitchell, buyer of strange oils and other substances from Java, China and other spicy places for one of the largest soap manufacturers on earth, was present at the bomb explosions outside J. P. Morgan & Company, at Wall and Broad streets, several years ago, and also at the recent bomb explosions in the subway.

Frank himself says he had naught to do with planting the bombs, and his word is good here. He just happened to be right on the spot both times, although on the first occasion he was not living here and was merely in New York on a short business trip from the west.

Probably he is the only man alive who was present at both explosions, and this includes the criminals. He heard the noise and saw the pieces fly. The first time he saw men killed. The second time he saw the sidewalk heave up and the earth open.

"SWEET ADELINE" IN COURT.

Who would have supposed that "Sweet Adeline," of all women, would ever get into the courts? Yet a candy company and a music publisher are actually going to law over "Sweet Adeline," and not because she's the flower of their heart, either.

No, there might be something romantic in that, but this is a point of trade—drab, dull, materialistic trade. "Gold will buy anything but a true girl's heart," sang quartets under the influence of—er, ah, the spring of the nebulous nineties, and they meant it, but now it is only too true that two business outfits are dickering over what certainly used to be the true heart of "Sweet Adeline."

The copyright owners ask the federal court in Brooklyn to restrain the candy company from using two lines of the song on the wrapper of a candy bar.

"Sweet Adeline, my heart doth pine," are the words. Many a father has asked that quartets be restrained from singing them under the bedroom window of his daughter, at 2 a. m., but heretofore recourse has been had to the police, not the federal courts.

GOOD NIGHT, DEAR HEART

To some it may come as a shock that the song "Sweet Adeline," supposedly the property of this great and glorious nation, was ever copyrighted. As heavy a shock, mayhap, as Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, music critic, author, and sometimes university professor, suffered recently when he and a few other members of his quartet were hunting for the lost barber-shop chord in a song session in a New York store.

While singing of "Sweet Adeline," and casting an eye about the auditorium as male quartets will, especially when there are ladies present, Dr. Spaeth observed a woman of middle age and then some, shedding tears. When the song ended he tiptoed down the aisle and spoke to this woman.

"Madam, why do you weep?" he inquired.

"Alas, sir," she replied, "I am 'Sweet Adeline,'—or I was."

She then went on to tell of many serenades outside her window, but not recently, and after that she excused herself, saying she must hurry home to the children and the dinner.

And as she passed up the aisle Dr. Spaeth noted with dismay that "Sweet Adeline" had grown dreadfully stout.

NOISY CORNER FOR DEAF PUPILS

Elevated trains, surface cars, and a continuous stream of trucks made Second avenue and Twenty-third street a particularly noisy corner.

A fine place, therefore, for the new public school where 600 deaf or partly deaf children will study this fall. It is one of 13 new public school buildings, to accommodate 11,381 pupils.

WHY NOT FIFTY-SEVEN?

One Long Island apple tree, grafted with shoots from 24 varieties of apple trees, is now bearing 35 varieties of apples.

HOW BROOKLYN DOES IT

Furniture filling two solid trains of 25 cars each arrives for new skyscraper hotel in Brooklyn Heights, where decorators work in 24-hour shifts to complete dining halls in time for affairs now scheduled.

Remember, Love

BY ERNEST NEAL—POET LAUREATE OF GEORGIA.

(The occasion that inspires it and the circumstances under which it is written sometimes contribute more to the appreciation of a song than does the song itself. This is true even of such masterpieces as "Lead Kindly Light," "Mary in Heaven," "The Star-Spangled Banner," "Home, Sweet Home," "Flanders' Field," and "Mighty Lak a Rose."

That the reader may more fully catch the spirit and meaning of the poem that follows, I briefly state, by way of prelude, how it came to be.

During the world war while superintendent of schools in a Georgia town I had in our high school graduating class a young lady whose sweetheart was in a soldiers' training camp.

Now, "in loco parentis" is the attitude of every true teacher in relation to the boys and girls entrusted to his care and guidance, and, when this beautiful girl came into my office one morning to tell me that John's company had been ordered to France, and at that very hour, he was out on the ocean, I tried to soothe her rebellious spirit with kindly words of sympathy, all in vain. "He will never come back," was the doleful refrain to all my words of encouragement.

Day after day she grew more and more disconsolate. The black cloud of war had cast its shadow over love's young dream. Now and then she would come to school with a calm radiance in her sad, intelligent face, but never again did her voice ring with school girl gladness.

Months elapsed. Then came the charge of the doughboys at Chateau Thierry, the battle of dark Argonne—and John was among the thousands whose life blood is the price of liberty. And then I wrote "Remember, Love," with John and Jenny and 10,000 other embodiments of love and duty in my soul. —THE AUTHOR.)

Oh, would you have me linger here
To dally, love, with you,
While duty's voice is calling clear
Across the waters blue?
Remember, love,
'Tis duty's hand that brings to you
Honor's brightest bloom;
'Tis duty's voice that sings to you
To banish fear and gloom.
'Tis duty's heart that cares for you,
'Tis duty's arm that bares for you
And do or die dares for you—
Remember, love.

Oh, look not so reproachful, love,
From tender eyes and true;
I hold not duty's voice above
The call of heart, of home, of you,
Remember, love,
To me you'll ever be the same,
And nearest when I'm far;
For duty's but your other name
And the smoke of war.
Thus love and duty cry to me,
And all mankind they tie to me,
Nor faith in God can die to me—
Remember, love.

If you should ever call me, love,
Across the distant blue;
If you should ever call, and I
Should fail to answer you,
Remember, love,
I'm the star that glows for you
Beyond the realm of night;
I'm the sun that throws for you
The summer's glorious light.
I'm the flag I waved for you,
And with my life-blood laved for you—
I'm all things duty saved for you—
Remember, love.

The Single-Shot Party

The death of Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler was a shock to the public. The tragic death of his wife only a few days before had already won for him the sympathy of all, political enemies as well as friends. It is interesting and significant, now that he is dead, that even his bitterest political foes are uttering a tardy appreciation of his virtues. Senator Edwards, of New Jersey, the irreconcilable wet, speaks of his "admiration for the sincere convictions of Mr. Wheeler," and calls him a "good fighter."

One is reminded of the famous phrase of Sam Jones, "I would rather have more taffy while I am alive, and less epitaphy when I am dead." It does seem a pity that men do allow their feelings to become so involved in a fight that they are unwilling to accord to their opponents the admiration which is due to their virtues, while they are still alive. Mr. Wheeler was "a good fighter" and was sincerely loyal to his principles while he was living, and it would have been so much better if Senator Edwards could have said so while he was still alive and fighting.

The Political Game.

But the death of Mr. Wheeler inevitably marks a period in the great fight of prohibition, which has for so long a time convulsed this country socially and politically. It would be well for every true lover of sobriety to pause and calmly consider our past history. Mr. Wheeler not only personified a militant moral movement in the political world, but he stands for a certain method of forwarding his cause which we may well question. He helped to forge what might be called a single-shot political party. This party had a single tenet in its creed and a single purpose in its platform. It was organized for the single objective of abolishing the liquor traffic in this country. As a party it cared nothing for any other economic, political, or social issue. For this reason it welcomes into its ranks anyone who is willing to make the liquor question the paramount issue.

The strength of a political movement of this kind is readily seen. It has the power of summoning men of varying political faiths and party alignments to the support of one political objective. But its weaknesses and dangers are just as obvious.

In its devotion to one creed and one objective it will inevitably sacrifice all other questions and ideals to the success of its one purpose. Absorbed in its one object, it forgets all the other vital questions, and often supremely important issues, which may challenge the decision of a nation.

Such a compact and powerful organization as the Anti-Saloon league, asking only one question of the politician, "wet or dry"?, is a dangerous temptation to the professional politician. Too often it has been true he is willing to vote "dry" in order to secure the powerful backing of the Anti-Saloon league on election day, but on all other questions he may use his vote for selfish, and even nefarious purposes.

The Smith senatorial fight in Illinois was one of the most shocking examples of this dangerous policy of the league. Mr. Smith is the outstanding example of what has come to be known as a "political dry." When he stands before the bar of the senate charged with having obtained his election by bribery, the Anti-Saloon league must inevitably become parties criminis. Ignoring the notorious record of this candidate in all of his other political relations, the league gave him its official approval, because he was willing to vote "dry."

Obedience vs. Enforcement.

Personally I am in hearty sympathy with the one objective of the league. I, too, am willing to pray and work for the day when the traffic, legal and illegal, in intoxicating beverages shall be abolished. Having stated this without any reservation whatsoever, I am anxious, together with all true lovers of sobriety, to calmly and impartially review the methods by which we are now seeking to accomplish this great purpose. I have no sympathy with the popular protest, which interprets prohibition legislation as an attempt "to make people good by law." The purpose of the 18th amendment is not to make people good, but to make society safe. The laws against burglary, poisonous narcotics, and reckless driving on the highways do not have the purpose of making bad people good, but seek to protect innocent people from dangerous people.

In the case of the enforcement of these other criminal laws, society has to deal with only a small minority of law-breakers. In the case of the prohibition law we are confronted by a very large minority, possibly a majority, of otherwise law-abiding citizens who refuse to support the law. I am ready frankly to admit that this large number of people, in almost open rebellion, cannot be forced into obedience. I am also forced, against my will, to believe that the partisan, often unfair, methods hitherto pursued by the Anti-Saloon league have helped to create a spirit of lawlessness which, while it does not excuse, does help to explain the widespread disobedience of this particular law.

I am not assuming, in the space allowed me here, to present an easy plan for the success of the prohibition cause. There is no easy method for the accomplishment of such a tremendous social revolution. At the same time I am convinced that the time has come to substitute for the partisan, "strong arm" methods of the past an intelligent appeal to the innate patriotism of our people to abide by their own laws.

Wayne B. Wheeler stood the test of a fierce searching light of partisan criticism, and died with the verdict of friend and foe alike, that he was honest and loyal to his convictions. That despite all of his limitations he made a great contribution to the cause of sobriety history will record. Nevertheless we who love that cause also will be recreant to our responsibility if we fail to learn the lessons of the past.

LEAKAGE.
BY J. D. Ellemby.

The immigration problem confronting the labor department and, indirectly, the people of the United States is one of the most serious difficulties that has ever been presented. Laws have been made concerning the immigration of undesirable peoples; they are strictly enforced, but the leakage over our borders has reached such alarming proportions that no one can tell how many foreigners slip through the net annually. These are the Saccos and Vanzettis, the reds, the gang leaders—in short, the corruption which is slowly and insidiously covering our nation.

Many people wonder at the state of affairs in Chicago. Everyone has been blamed from the president down to the mayor. Yet none seem aware of the fact that in a high-power motor boat one can go from Chicago to Canada in less than a day. We can blame not the mayor of Chicago, nor the chief of police, nor the John Henrys in charge of the city for this condition, but the citizens, so-called, of our own country who arrange to get these men into the country for the exceedingly nominal charges of $50 up to $500.

In the Manufacturers' Record of August 18 a speech by Frank A. Goodwin to the Kiwanis club, of Lawrence, Mass., is quoted. Speaking of Sacco, Vanzetti and the red peril, Mr. Goodwin says:

"These two murderers, Sacco and Vanzetti, have been found guilty by a jury of twelve citizens, as prescribed by law, who heard all the witnesses under oath and under cross-examination. The supreme court has ruled that the conviction was according to law, and it also ruled that there was sufficient evidence to warrant placing the case before the jury for its decision.

"It is an impressive fact that the nearer we get to the scene of the murder, the more convinced are the people that these men are guilty. The citizens of Norfolk county know these men are guilty. On the other hand, in those domains where foreign and un-American principles are in vogue, such as Russia, Harvard, Argentine, Wellesley, China and Smith, they are sure these men are innocent."

The problem is one which must be solved quickly. It behooves us to watch the activities of these aliens and, when the opportunity offers, let us do our part to rid the country of this peril and to plug the leaks forever.

STORY OF THE DAYS WHEN SPAIN SETTLED THE GEORGIA COAST MORE THAN A CENTURY BEFORE OGLETHORPE'S COMING

Did Spain Have a Valid Title To Georgia?---Her Occupation A Century Before Oglethorpe

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON. of The Constitution Staff.

A great majority of people who have not given a researchful study to the subject believe that the recorded history of Georgia begins with the arrival of General Oglethorpe and his little band of English debtors who debarked at Yammacraw bluff, which is now Savannah, on one bright spring morning in 1733.

They know, of course, of the antedating Indian tribes, but prior to the first Creek treaty made by General Oglethorpe, and the subsequent written history of wars, negotiations, intrigues and both loyalty and treachery on the part of some of the Red chieftains and their conspiring advisers from among adventurous invaders, the general supposition is that the pre-Oglethorpe history is entirely legendary.

With the exception of the somewhat mythical and muchly confused story of the ill-fated DeSoto expedition in the early years of the 16th century, and the subsequent Spanish expeditions of De Luna and Villafane, which also met distress, followed by the bolder undertaking of France under the leadership of Ribaut and Laudonniere Admiral Coligny, the people as a rule have the idea that everything was left to the aborigines of the forests and jungles until English civilization established Georgia as a buffer colony between the Carolinas and Florida—or specifically, in the original grant to the trustees, between the Savannah and the Altamaha rivers.

A great majority of people believe that Georgia was named for King George II who was the monarch of England at the time of the grant to the trustees. The truth is, Georgia had been mapped and charted and the name "Georgia" plainly written across the face of its territory extending between the rivers and far to the west fully 200 years during the reign of George I, for whom the colony was named.

And as to the pre-Oglethorpe occupation of Georgia, Menendez de Aviles, a Spanish tyrant, but masterful in generalship, held the seaboard of Georgia tight in his grip from early in 1566 for a generation, and founded the first settlement on Guale—now St. Catherine's island. He became the Great White Father of the native villages on Sapaloe, St. Simons, Jekyl and along the Altamaha delta.

From that time forward Spanish colonists poured into the coast country and even pushed up the Savannah to Augusta, and down into the hinterland. Athough, on account of keeping in sight of the Spanish trading vessels, a majority of the colonists kept closely to the shore lines and occupied principally the sea islands that dot the coast from the Savannah river to Cumberland sound. A large number of the colonists were missionaries of the Catholic faith, the Jesuits first, followed later by the Friars.

Hundreds of little Spanish missions built of stone dotted the sea coasts. The seaboard of Georgia was a veritable bee-hive of missionary activities confined to teaching and preaching to the natives and also to the Spanish colonists who had followed the missionaries across. There were none but Spaniards of the white races.

In the meantime the struggle with the Anglo-Saxons, who occupied the Carolinas, for Georgia territory began with the terrific force of open warfare. England challenged and Spain defended, claiming the right by discovery and first occupation and development. The struggle lasted for more than a hundred years, ending in fact only with the terrific battle of Bloody Marsh, on St. Simons island, in which General Oglethorpe with a mere handful in comparison whipped the Spaniards to a frazzle and drove the remnants back to the garrison at St. Augustine.

GREATEST AUTHORITY A GEORGIA WOMAN.

Miss Mary Ross, a native Brunswick woman, and now of the faculty and library staff of the University of California, is the most outstanding authority living on the history of the Spanish occupation of Georgia's coastal lands and of the old Spanish missions—of the missionaries themselves, of their labors, their struggles, their sacrifices and their victories. Miss Ross has made the most comprehensive research of any living person. She has personally visited the ruins of the old missions, the old Spanish forts, the villages. She has interpreted their inscriptions, and has connected the history of those stirring days of English and Spanish struggles for Georgia's land as no one else ever has.

In today's Constitution she has contributed a most entertaining and illuminating story briefly outlining this pre-Oglethorpe history of the Spanish dominion along the Georgia coast and has told it so fascinatingly that it will not only grip a reader's attention but its informative features are most valuable, especially to one who loves romantic history.

In connection with Miss Ross' very remarkable article, The Constitution is publishing in its rotogravure section today two pages of reproductions of photographs taken by a staff photographer only recently of the ruins of some of these old missions and other decaying relics of the more than one hundred years when Spaniards—priests and soldiers—ruled Georgia with iron hands. Some of these old missions and garrisons, found principally in the Brunswick sea-island area and along the Altamaha and the St. Marys, are in a marvelous state of preservation today considering the ravages of elements for all the ages that have followed.

In connection with Miss Ross' article, which I had carefully read in manuscript, I have just finished reading a most remarkable book on the same subject generally, but containing the claim that Spain has never surrendered, except under the force of in addition a detailed discussion of arms, that she had a prior, and a more tenable claim to Georgia than England.

This book, the title of which is "Spain's Title to Georgia," the author, Dr. Herbert E. Bolton, professor of American history at the University of California, gives considerable space to a review of Arredondo's historical "proof" of the righteousness of this claim of Spain, the challenge and defense of which precipitated almost continuous warfare for a century, during which, at times, France also became involved.

The volume is in two parts. The first is under the title, "The Debatable Land," and the co-author with Dr. Bolton of that particular discussion and history is Miss Ross, the Georgia girl who has become nationally famous through her studies of the earliest white man's occupation of Georgia. In Dr. Bolton's preface he pays her the following recognition:

"For inestimable assistance in the preparation of the introduction I am indebted to Miss Mary Ross. The actual writing was done by myself but so great has been her aid that this portion of the work is being published separately under joint authorship with the title, 'The Debatable Land.'"

AS ARREDONDO SAW SPAIN'S CLAIM.

There has been a marvelous renaissance of interest, in the present decade, in the history of the "old southeast." Dr. Swanton has made interesting researches into the history of the Creeks.

Dr. Crane has made an exhaustive study of the southward advance of the English border in the 17th and 18th centuries.

The early church history of the old southeast is being written admirably by Dr. Guilday.

Hence the work of Dr. Bolton, in which Miss Ross collaborated in a large portion, is finding a ready demand, for it is splendidly written and is history of which very few people comparatively speaking, know.

According to Dr. Bolton, who alone is responsible for the review of Arredondo's "Demostracion Historiographica," it is a most interesting and important document. It seems to make clearer than any other work the nature of the long contest between Spain and England as to the title of the Georgia land. Arredondo was a trained soldier and diplomat and saw service on the disputed frontier. In 1736 he was sent from Havana to protest to General Oglethorpe against the establishment of the Georgia colony. In 1742 he was chief of staff in the Spanish campaign against England.

Dr. Bolton claims in his Arredondo discussion that the memoir brings into clear relief the following episodes in the early history of the south Atlantic seaboard: First, the planting of Georgia settlements on the Georgia-South Carolina coast, 1566-1670; second, the founding of Charleston, 1670; third, the treaty of 1670 by which Spain recognized the legality of England's natural settlements in America — including Charleston — at that date; fourth, the destruction of the Georgia settlements on the Georgia coast by English and Indian raids, 1670-1702; fifth, the founding by Carolinians of Fort King George on the Altamaha in 1721; sixth, the diplomatic controversy in Europe and America resulting therefrom, 1733; eighth, founding of the Georgia colonly by General Oglethorpe in 1733. And then followed the resulting diplomatic controversy, the Sanchez-Oglethorpe treaty, the Arredondo episode and the Geraldino-Newcastle correspondence.

The argument by Arredondo was that Spain had first right to the southeastern coast by discovery, exploration and occupation. That between 1566 and 1670 she maintained actual settlements between the St. Johns river and the Port Royal harbor. He charged that England's claim to the disputed region on the basis of Cabot's voyage, Drake's raid, the Carolina charters and the grant of Port Royal to Dr. Henry Woodward were baseless and absurd. Dr. Bolton has translated Arredondo as saying that by the treaty of 1670 the principle of actual possession was agreed upon by Spain and England. This compact, he holds, legalized England's ownership as far south as Charleston and Spain's as far north as Santa Elena sound—32 degrees, 30 minutes north latitude. Therefore, that the subsequent English raids on the Georgia establishments were a violation of Spain's rights based on actual settlement, and an infraction of the treaty of 1670.

The first half of "Spain's Title to Georgia," in which Miss Ross collaborated, consists of an historical sketch of the ground covered by Arredondo, broadened to include the Georgia back country and extending chronologically to 1763, the time when the Anglo-Spanish contest was ended by the cession of Florida to England.

The author injects the statement that his extensive researches and investigations "in the main bears out the soundness of the historical portions of Arredondo's account."

The author further says, quoting from his preface:

"This contribution from the Pacific coast to the history of the Atlantic seaboard is a token of the unity of all Spanish North America. In the olden time the Georgia country was one of Spain's northern borderlands, linked by common ties with the whole frontier that stretched from the Caribbean westward to the Pacific ocean. At the very time when Oglethorpe was invading Florida and Vernon was attacking the isthmus, the viceroy of New Spain was urging the defensive colonization of Tamaulipas, and taking measures to protect the California coast and the Manila galleons against capture by George Anson."

DISTRICT OF GUALE ON GEORGIA COAST.

That section of the coast that was dotted with Spanish missions, much more than a century before the arrival of General Oglethorpe, extended from the St. Marys river to Port Royal.

Spanish influence was planted in the midst of nearly every coast tribe. Small soldier garrisons protected the missionaries.

The Georgia coast constituted the district of Guale and was a part of the province of La Florida. As already related, most of the missions were on the islands, thus in a measure divorced from the trackless mainland wildernesses.

The supporting base, by which the missionaries were sustained, was San Augustin, capital of the province of Florida, of which the Georgia country was a part. Here a presidio served as the center of supply and control and furnished succor in time of need. The guardian outpost on the north until 1587 was Santa Elena, Port Royal. It had its presidio of San Felipe. After Santa Elena was withdrawn Santa Catalina, near the Savannah, held the border for nearly a century.

Spain's main pathways between these outposts were cut through the water. Larger craft braved the outer sea. Smaller craft sought the inland passages.

The necklace of islands that front the ocean and their friendly inland waters are rich, therefore, in historic interest.

After the founding of Charleston the English colonists steadily encroached on the Spanish settlements in Guale, while in the hinterland Carolina traders challenged Spain's hold on the Apalachicola confederacy.

Step by step the Spanish frontier receded. In 1680 Spain withdrew her Guale outposts, St. Catharine's and the Altamaha. Six years later the frontier retreated to the St. Marys. A decade and a half still later, during Queen Anne's war, it fell back to the St. Johns.

The Yamassee war of 1715 demonstrated the long-felt need of a buffer English outpost south of the Savannah. With the coming of General Oglethorpe's Georgia colony in 1733 a half decade of noisy argument followed on the border.

The contest for Gaule then became a part of the larger struggle known as the "War of Jenkins' Ear." Georgia continued to be debatable land. England then for a decade or more nursed the idea of a "neutral ground," unoccupied by either contestant. Hoping to reconcile Spain she forbade Englishmen to settle south of the Altamaha. Unruly frontiersmen violated the "neutral ground." Spain then entered the Seven Years' war in spite of English diplomacy and as a result lost all of her lands east of the Mississippi. The long contest over Georgia land was thus ended.

All of this, in historic detail, is minutely told in the book, "Spain's Title to Georgia." In its co-author-

Spanish Days On the Georgia Coast

BY MARY ROSS

(Georgia woman, now occupying chair in University of California and most eminent authority on early occupation of both east and west sections of the United States by Spain.)

(For The Constitution.)

There is a magic note in the summons that heralds a treasure hunt. Just as Marco Polo's tales of great adventure had caused Mediterranean excursionists to penetrate fair Cathay, so, too, the stories of rare conquests in Mexico and Peru sent ambitious conquistadores into all parts of the new world. In fact the gates of the Georgia story swung open to the mystic call of an "Otro Peru."

Caribbean chroniclers had told weird tales of life-giving waters, giant men, gold-bearing streams and lakes of pearls to be found in the Florida wilderness. Spanish pioneers, too, had reconnoitered the northern coasts and attempted conquest, but fate decreed that the renowned De Soto, already versed in Peruvian lore, should make the first entry into the mysterious northland, the Georgia-Carolina back country.

Filled with the zeal of a sixteenth century explorer that mighty hidalgo, armored and bold, entered the coveted land. At Apalache, near the hill site of Tallahassee, he learned of Coosa and golden Yupaha, where riches were to be found in plenty and where rulers clothed themselves in garments fair. There it was, too, that he heard of the "Lady of Cufitachiqui," a feminine El Dorado in truth, tales of whose beauty and marvelous pearls rumor made miraculous.

As if by some unseen power elusive lands stepped forth from the shadowy north and beckoned to the De Soto band. His army numbered more than five hundred strong, amidst whom were friars, carpenters, shipmakers, doctors, armorers, and blacksmiths. Each was now eager for the search. And with characteristic decision the Florida adelantado broke camp, and with a single guide set out northeastward across the Georgia wilds, intent upon the search for Cufitachiqui.

Half of the company was mounted but the trail was uncertain. For five hundred miles and more they struggled, heavily burdened, across swamp and stream and untracked jungle. The toll was great. Frequently both horse and rider were swept down stream and burden bearers, prostrated, dropped by the way. An occasional village proffered welcome and cheer and bade the white visitors tarry. How the Ocmulgee and Oconee towns vied in service but the cavalcade hurried on toward the "rising sun," enticed by promises of riches rare.

Provisions grew scarce as the leagues multiplied. Empty saddle bags told the tale of sterile pine barrens through which the army passed. Salt was at a premium. Even game became a luxury and De Soto was forced to slaughter some of the swine he drove on foot in reserve for emergency.

The fording of the Ogeechee and Savannah was well nigh impossible, so emaciated had the men and horses become. Even the guide failed De Soto. The young lad, for he was nothing but a youth, became so bewildered and frightened that he fell into a fit. But just when the gloom seemed heaviest a hardy Spanish scout returned exultant. In a Carolina clearing, just about a two or three days march from the sea, he had found a cache of corn. The settlement nearby the natives called Aymay; the Spaniards named it the Village of Rescue. But what was better still, news was brought that Cufitachiqui was not far distant. Just two days travel beyond the Aymay camp in the red mould valley of the Congeree was the coveted realm.

Camp was all astir. Hope, all buoyant and aglow, rallied failing spirits. Armor was mended and polished, horses were groomed, and other preparations made for a spectacular march. The coming of the white men had been heralded. As De Soto drew near the river bank, a canopied barge approached from the north. On a royal diadem of state was seated a princess of the blood, clothed in soft fur and garments fine. She had been sent by her widowed mother to give welcome to the lordly Spaniards. Courtesies were exchanged; the Princess bearing a necklace of pearls; the Spanish Don presented a ruby ring. And when the army had made a landing great was the feasting for the men.

But Cufitachiqui, fertile and abundant, was not Peru. De Soto tarried for awhile, then moved on northwestward to the mountain land, seeking other treasures. Perchance, someday he might return but distant Coosa called him now, and crossing where the east-flowing Broad sends challenge to its French namesake in the west, the great adelantado kept the Blue Ridge on his left and turned southwestward toward the Father of Waters and to his doom. But De Soto's going left the Georgia-Carolina back country free for two or more decades.

The First Georgia Settlements.

But the Atlantic seaboard was not bare of interest. Within the range of her eastern horizon the treasure fleets of Spain passed, homeward bound and richly laden with the fruits of the Indies. Naturally harbors and safety-stations on the Georgia coast were enviable possessions, possible rendezvous for pirates and sea-raiders who dreamed great dreams of conquest as they lay in wait for full cargoed galleon, straggling behind a convoyed fleet.

Missionaries, too, saw priceless returns in the Florida wilds. Heathen tribesmen and cannibalistic kings promised a rich harvest in salvaged souls. By the middle of the sixteenth century both Church and State were eager for the occupation of the northern continent.

Interest became acute. First Spain despatched a great colonizing expedition under De Luna and Villafane from Mexico. But this effort was defeated by dissensions and storms and for the moment northern develments lulled. Then France became emboldened and under Ribaut and Laudonniere Admiral Coligny promoted two expeditions; one to settle at Port Royal or Santa Elena, the other to take possession in the Peninsula on the St. Johns.

But Spain promptly challenged the intrusions of the enemy. Rojas cruised the Georgia coast, hunted out the French pillar in the Carolina district, and burned their abandoned hut. Down on the Peninsula Menendez de Aviles met the enemy and annihilated his forces. These drastic measures centered attention on the northern mainland and Spain launched a great colonization program.

Menendez had not only become the defender of the Georgia seaboard, but in April, 1566, he became the founder of her first settlement on Guale or St. Catherine's island and Great White Father of the native villages on Sapelo, St. Simons and Jekyl. From Tampa bay to Norfolk harbor the firm hand of the great captain was felt. At San Augustin and Santa Elena he established two presidios and placed soldiers and colonists there, in between on the Georgia fringes of the Inland Passage he planted outposts and prepared the way for the civilization of the native and the development of the country.

The first laborers in the Georgia vineyard were a small band of thirty Spaniards who made headquarters at Guale or St. Catherines. These were soon followed by another company of one hundred and fifty who established themselves at San Pedro on Cumberland island. In between these major units were settlements at Zapala, Tupiqui, Asao and Tolomato, mission bases for work among the heathen.

The Jesuits were the first Soldiers of the Cross in the Georgia country. And their sacrifice was heavy. Scarcely had Father Martinez touched foot on that soil when he was brutally despatched by a wooden ax or macana in the hands of a Timucua native, an ally of the French. But this baptism in blood added fervor to the cause. Menendez established Fort San Pedro on Cumberland island to hold the hostile Indians in check and petitioned the king for missionaries. Encouraged now, other Black Robes came. Brothers Domingo Agustin and Pedro Ruiz learned the Guale tongue at Santa Catalina and visited Sapelo and St. Simons, while Father Rogel ministered to the Indian at Orista, the present Carolina island, Edisto.

For a few years the Jesuits prospered. Then disease, hunger, and strife defeated their labors and caused them to give up that border. But the torch lighted by those fearless souls did not go out.

In 1573, just a year before the death of Menendez the Little Brothers of St. Francis accepted the Florida call. Father Alonso Reynoso looms large on the Franciscan horizon in the Georgia country. Numerous documents relative to that land present him active and zealous, hurrying back and forth from Santa Elena to Guale and thence to Spain, raising funds and workers for his beloved neophytes at Tolomato, Tupiqui, and Yoa, all Guale establishments along the inside route.

Indeed the Georgia sea roads were very busy. Swift oared pirogues plied up and down the meandering creeks bearing paymasters, missionaries, and noble chieftains, or, more often hurried back and forth transporting supplies for presidio and mission use. Sometimes a cypress canoe passed, paddled by a long figure, robed in brown, intent on answering a distant sick call. Almost any day a swarthy fisherman could be seen or a huntsman approached armed with bow and arrow. For such was life in youthful Georgia.

Corsairs and Sassafras Traders.

However, this pacific sea lane sometimes witnessed struggle and turmoil. French free traders continued to visit that coast. There they traded for sassafras and sometimes they intrigued with the Indians. On one occasion local difficulties between the Spanish official at Santa Elena and the chieftains at Escamacu (near Beaufort) and Espogue (near Sapelo) supplemented by the presence of French corsairs on the coast threw the whole region into disorder.

But the French were not the only transgressors. In 1586 Sir Francis Drake burned San Augustin and spread terror up and down the coast. As a result the troops at Santa Elena were brought down to San Augustin, the Peninsula stronghold, and Guale, or St. Catherine's island, became the northern guardian of Spanish interest on the Atlantic seaboard. The Georgia district increased in importance. In 1595 eight missionaries were assigned to that province. Their successful labors revived old schemes to open the back country. Plans got under way to visit Cufitachiqui and reopen the Los Diamantes region visited by Pardo and Boyano in 1566. So satisfactory were affairs in Guale that two pioneers, Fathers Chozas and Velascola, went on a horseback journey to the Ocmulgee-Oconee towns and made arrangements for the planting of a mission outpost.

When all was brightest disaster came. The two missionaries had barely returned to their respective posts, Velascola to St. Simons and Chozas to Cumberland, when the fire of rebellion swept the land. Incensed by restraint imposed by Father Corpa, his spiritual adviser, Don Juan, heir to the mico at Tolomato, aroused a band of followers and slaughtered the missionary as he slept. The massacre spread. From Tolomato to Tupiqui, thence to Guale and down to Asao (St. Simons) and Ospo (Jekyl) the angry mob passed. And before it spent its fury before the doors of San Pedro (Cumberland), five missionaries had been killed and one taken prisoner.

But in due time repentance and adjustment came. By 1605 the Guale missions had been restored and the next year His Lordship the bishop of Cuba came up out of the Caribbean to make the first episcopal visitation ever made in our country. His record of spiritual attainment in the Georgia country alone, reveals the reception of confirmation by 1,070 natives of that land.

But the Georgia seaboard was not destined for peace. Drought and disease, hard labor and hostile raids carried off many of its native sons. Nor were the missionaries exempt. In 1617 an epidemic killed off a large part of the population. Long hauls up and down the Inland Passage between St. Catherines and the St. Johns told on the under-nourished natives, and in 1651 another pestilence reduced the already diminishing numbers. Nevertheless, the good friars stayed on and by 1655 they had pushed the mission frontier back up into the Santa Elena or Carolina borders.

In fact the middle of the seventeenth century marked the Golden Age of the Franciscan story in the Georgia country, but barely had the Guale settlements celebrated their first centennial (1666) when a cloud came out from the sea.

Guale Stands Guard.

Guale was now to be tested in full. News came of a stranger at the northern gate. Twenty leagues beyond Santa Catalina at the old Spanish post of Santa Elena (Parris island), an Englishman had taken up his residence and allied himself with the chieftain. This intruder was the intrepid young Virginia surgeon, Dr. Henry Woodward, who had joined with a Barbadian expedition to sound the Carolina harbors. When that investigation was finished Woodward stayed on to learn the language of the country and to evaluate the strength of Spanish defense in that borderland.

Before long, however, the young doctor found himself a prisoner at San Augustin. But there he capitalized his imprisonment. Ingratiating himself into the good graces of the governor, taking up his residence with the custos, and under the baptismal name of Juan Enrique (John Henry) embracing the Catholic religion, Woodward soon learned the secrets of the Florida capital. And when occasion came he took the first opportunity to escape with a pirate vessel that raided that town. Luck was with Henry Woodward. At the island of Nevis he encountered an English vessel bound for the Florida frontier, where in short order Woodward helped to plant the colony of Charleston, at the very gateway of the Georgia missions.

Santa Catalina became conscious of Woodward's return. One day, a sloop belonging to the Carolina company, missed its bearings and put in at Guale or Santa Catalina. Eight men and two women landed, seeking information. Two of the men, John Rivers and William Carr, were persons of importance, but the Spanish Indian cleverly beguiled them into visiting their village and with a quick turn about made them prisoners. Becoming suspicious at the delay of those on land, the captain of the boat lifted anchor and proceeded to Charleston.

Whereupon Governor Sayle penned a blustering note and dispatched his ultimatum to the Georgia mission. The Spaniards must deliver the captives at once or "look out" for themselves. This peremptory message was delivered by Joseph Bailey and John Collins. But Santa Catalina was adamant. Hers it was to defend that frontier and the Englishmen had planted themselves on Spanish soil. They would be treated as trespassers, and Bailey and Collins, like Rivers and Carr, soon found themselves prisoners at San Augustin.

A half century before, Virginia had been challenged by San Augustin. The planting now at San Jorge (Charleston), the old Cayaguan harbor, was too much. San Augustin prepared for battle and the Georgia native rallied to the war cry. In short order an expedition, made up of three Spanish frigates and fourteen native pirogues, sailed north. In August, 1670, they drew up before the infant English colony. Cowering behind their hasty defenses the Carolina company all but despaired. But scarcely had the Spaniards dropped anchor when a storm arose. The cables were snapped and like crippled veterans the ships tacked back to San Augustin. The Georgia natives, however, were of sturdier make and for several days, with hideous calls and weird night threats, they struck terror to the heart of the entrenched Britishers, before returning to Guale.

Fear and alarm now turned into determined wrath. The diplomats at home might settle the issue by the American Treaty, guaranteeing San Jorge (Charleston) to England, but over in the new world San Augustin and Charleston were sworn enemies, with local tribesmen allied on either side. At first the Spaniards held the upper hand and Carolina borders were at a loss to find an artful plan that might still keep the peace, yet weaken the enemy. At last they hit upon a scheme. With heathen aid "Wallie" (Guale) with her Christian Indians was to be destroyed. And in good time a wilderness reigned where once fertile fields nurtured Georgia natives. But the destruction of the Georgia missions was not accomplished without a struggle.

The presence of the English in the Santa Elena district converted the Guale border into an armed camp. The Spanish governor visited Santa Catalina and twenty-five soldiers were dispatched at once to defend that mission. Nor were her sister establishments neglected. San Jose on Zapala with Espogue and Tupiqui on the opposite mainland, Santa Domingo (Dupont plantation) on the Altamaha with San Simon on a nearby island, San Buenaventura on Jekyl, San Felipe on Cumberland, Santa Maria up the river of the same name, and San Juan on Fort George island near the St. Johns were also given support. The presidio of San Augustin likewise took on new life. In fact the coquina fortress found there today came into being in response to the Carolina threat.

The Anglo-Spanish Conflict.

Charleston was ten years in preparing. In 1680 her Indian allies made their first attack, striking almost simultaneously at Jekyl, St. Simons and St. Catherines. The weaker southern post suffered practical annihilation before Captain Fuentes could succor it, but Santa Catalina withstood an all-day siege and repulsed the enemy. But the toll was heavy. Gualean morale had been broken and the old Georgia border called for aid. San Augustin responded promptly but the natives on St. Catherines could not bear the burden and the frontier dropped back one step, down to Zapala.

The casa fuerte and barracks erected there stand today, nearly two and a half centuries old (247 years), defiant not only to the memory of the Anglo-Saxon intrusion but to the very ravages of Father Time. For six years Zapala kept watch, directed and taught by Captain Fuentes and Father Uzeda. Then a new menace arose. Charleston entertained Caribbean pirates, and the sea rovers in turn took up the habit of visiting the Georgia seaboard and walking off with their altar plate and mission stock.

The trio Carolinian, heathen Yamassee, and Caribbean corsair, were too much for the Guale natives. They could no longer defend themselves, and in 1686, Governor Cabrera of San Augustin rallied the Christian remnants from the prostrate missions of Santa Catalina, Zapala, Tupiqui, Talaxe, and San Simon and stationed them within the protecting shadow of San Augustin at Santa Maria, San Juan, and Santa Cruz.

A garrison was placed at Santa Maria, and the St. Marys with Cumberland across the way became the new guardian on the north. This arrangement carried the name "Guale" down into the Timucuan country, but few were the Gualeans left. The redman's story was finished; but, Spain did not relinquish her hold on the Georgia seaboard. In fact the Anglo-Spanish struggle for possession of the Georgia country continued for three-quarters of a century, during which period Barnwell attempted the Altamaha, Oglethorpe pushed across that stream to St. Simons and Gualquini sound, and Governor Ellis schemed for Cumberland and Satilla. But all territory below Charletson was debatable land and Spain would not yield. In the end the price of Spanish Georgia was the ransom of Havana in 1763.

And yet, even with the soil in a stranger's hands, the spirit of the Guale missions still prevailed. Gone were the Angelus bells; gone were the flickering flames that told of sanctuaries holy. Even the fields lay overgrown, unreclaimed and rank. Memory, too, of Castilian don and Franciscan friar dimmed with the years. But even today, deep within the forest wilds of the Georgia coast, broken, grey-walled monuments to Spanish days stand mute and calm, dignified witnesses to a time long past when missionary and neophyte called that land home. And seaward, voicing nominal evidence of the erstwhile presence of Gualean and Spaniard, the musical names now somewhat Anglicized, of Santa Catalina, San Jose de Zapala, San Simon, San Pedro, and Santa Maria, still give corroboration to the fact that one time the Georgia region served as a borderland to a great Spanish empire,

Renaissance of Coastal Georgia Recalls

APPROACHED ZENITH OF ITS DEVELOPMENT A CENTURY AGO

Golden Years of Its Greatest Prosperity

BY GEORGE D. LOWE.

Photos in Roto Section.

Brunswick, Ga., September 10.—(Special Correspondence.)—A century ago coastal Georgia was approaching the zenith of its wonderful agricultural development. On Sapeloe island Thomas Spalding, statesman and planter, had developed his island estate to the point of magnificent productiveness, and in the delta nearby he had established rice plantations that produced record-breaking crops. His sugar mills and cotton gins were driven by tidal power, utilizing the seven-foot lift of the Georgia coast efficiently and economically on Sapeloe while in the delta the rice was threshed and cleaned with tidal power also.

On the mainland of Glynn county James Hamilton Couper, the greatest agriculturist of his time, had in Hopetoun and Altama two great plantations with both upland and delta fields, growing cotton, sugar cane and rice as staple crops. Under his control on St. Simons Island were Hamilton and Cannon's Point plantations; Hamilton, where one of the south's early fortunes had been accumulated to go as dowry for several international marriages; and Cannon's Point where John Couper had grown olives and dates commercially along with sea island cotton, and had established a national reputation for hospitality and humane treatment of his slaves.

Great Planters On St. Simons.

On St. Simons Island Thomas Butler King, politician and man of affairs, had married Miss Page, the chatelaine of Retreat plantation, and King's Retreat with its master usually in Washington was becoming known as one of the most ably managed plantations in the whole south. James Hamilton Couper and Mrs. Anne Page King, both St. Simons-born, pioneered agricultural practices that scientists learned a half century later and that did not penetrate into ordinary farming for many years afterward. From Hampton Point, at the northern end of the island, the Butler family had taken their great fortune to Philadelphia and had left the magnificent old plantation to the management of a superintendent, Roswell King, later a great cotton manufacturer in upper Georgia.

Butler's Island, the rice plantation in the delta of the Altmaha, was also under the direction of Roswell King, who had come into Georgia to supervise the construction of the tabby mansion built on Sapeloe by Thomas Spalding about 1805. Champeney Island seems then to have been a part of Broughton Island where Henry Laurens, of South Carolina, had pioneered rice production in Georgia. Darien in that day was one of Georgia's wealthiest communities, and the counties of Glynn and McIntosh stood at the head of the Georgia list in wealth.

Men of Broad Vision.

Coastal Georgia bred men of vision and women of intelligence, beauty and managerial ability. In the debacle of the civil war no section suffered worse nor fell further into the slough of despond. The island cotton planters lost their labor, their homes, their capital and in many cases their lives. The delta rice planters and their brethren on the blackwater tidal rivers lost their labor, their capital and their homes, and their wonderful system of drainage and irrigation was ruined with the destruction of dikes and the silting of ditches. The labor turned to seafood and forestry operations and the landowners sought livelihoods in other sections.

Into coastal Georgia men of wealth had been coming for many years before Howard E. Coffin arrived on the scene. William DuPont has owned Hopetown and Altama a long time, but they comprise a great game preserve. Other fine old plantations had gone into the same usage, and landowners were no longer agriculturally minded in the area.

A Great Automotive Engineer.

Like other outstanding figures in the motor car industry Mr. Coffin forged his way to fame and wealth from a standing start without the background of wealth or influence. He had acquired his literary and engineering education through his own efforts, and within just a few years he and his associate, Roy D. Chapin, made the Hudson Motor Car company into one of the foremost factors in a new and great industry. Coming to the Savannah road races in 1909, Mr. Chapin found a wife in Georgia, and Mr. Coffin, already married, fell in love with the coastal region of the state and in 1911 acquired Sapeloe island, one of the largest of the Georgia chain that old geographers called "The Golden Isles."

Sapeloe, known to the Indian and Spaniard as Zapala, was the site of a Jesuit mission as early as 1575, and the Franciscan mission that succeeded it was a flourishing institution in 1608 with large fields cultivated by Indian slaves and fine plantings of oranges, figs, pomegranates and other exotic fruits. The island has had a colorful history. To it had come Povoillian du Bignon, first of the name in Georgia, and with him the first de Boiefeuillet, French monarchists both. A little syndicate of royalists attempted there a most unique experiment in communal ownership that went on the rocks. DuBignon went to Jekyl later, and to Sapeloe came a group of the saddened refugees from the bloody massacres in San Domingo and Hayti.

Spalding Builds on Sapeloe.

After the group of sorrowful Frenchmen who had lost their families in the terrible insurrection of the slaves passed on, Sapeloe came into the possession of the MacKay-Montague families and then to Thomas Spalding, son of James, the great Indian trader of Frederica, whose pack pony caravans penetrated the mountains of Tennessee and Carolina while his trading sloops carried cargoes up the St. Johns to the site of the present Sanford and west to the mouth of the Suwanee.

Thomas Spalding made of Sapeloe the finest island estate along the Atlantic coast. Had Fannie Kemble Btuler, temperamental English actress and unhappily married, chanced to marry a son of Thomas Spalding instead of a son of Pierce Butler and had visited Sapeloe instead of Hampton Point her viewpoint an slavery would have been different. She is supposed to have said so, and to have said also that, a Couper husband would not have the blood and misery of human chattels on his hands either. But the Butlers had been in Philadelphia 30 years and the estate was run by overseers to show a dividend. Fannie Kemble Butler's year on Butler's Island and Hampton Point embittered her life, and her views on slavery influenced Queen Victoria to oppose the recognition of the Southern Confederacy.

A Spalding and a Couper could own slaves and give them humane treatment, and Sapeloe was called "Nigger Heaven" by people who thought Thomas Spalding too lax in his control of the blacks. But Thomas

Milton Sills Hard - Boiled In New Film

"Hard-Boiled Haggerty," Milton Sills' latest starring picture, coming Monday to the Metropolitan theater, is said to be particularly notable for the fact that it contains not only a powerful characterization for the star, but unusually strong and effective ones for many other story characters.

Molly O'Day plays opposite the star in the role of a French girl of mystery, with whom Haggerty falls in love. Much comedy, and a burden of tense drama as well as the romantic side of the picture falls upon this new, very capable and attractive little actress.

Arthur Stone, army "buddy" of the fighting flier hero, is both clown and dramatic figure, and Mitchell Lewis as an air service major has a part said to be as powerful as his "Poleon Doret" of "The Barrier," or his famous stage role of "Captain Flagg" in "What Price Glory."

George Fawcett and Yola d'Avril, French dancing girl "find" of First National Pictures, producers of "Hard-Boiled Haggerty," has a part as the cafe dancer.

Enrico Liede, conducting the Metropolitan orchestra, will present a musical program as a special feature, using for the principal theme "Here in My Arms," from the musical comedy success, "Dearest Enemy." The extra screen attractions will include an Educational comedy, featuring Bobby Vernon, with the odd title, "Wife Shy," and the latest issue of the Metropolitan News and Views. This is the beginning of the third week of the Metropolitan's greater movie season, and indications point to a busy week.

On the upper left, monsieurs, is Evelyn Brent, the Bernhardt of screen crook roles, and she's featured in "Underworld" at the Howard theater this week. Jackie Coogan is seen in "The Bugle Call" at Loew's Grand. Lois Wilson and George K. Arthur are to be seen in "The Gingham Girl" at Keith's Georgia theater, and just to prove it, Lois is wearing a gingham dress. On the lower left is a scene from "The Last Outlaw," another Gary Cooper western, at the Rialto. Large gobs of Milton Sills are slated to be served up in "Hard-Boiled Haggerty" at the Metropolitan this week. Lower right is a scene from "The Joy Girl" at the Capitol theater.

"Underworld," a picture said to be as frank an expose by a fearless metropolitan newspaper, will be flashed upon the screen at the Howard theater tomorrow. This production that is said to be smashingly real in its treatment and that is also to be as absorbing as a drama of modern life.

The unfolding of the lives of underworld characters in an environment of crime, their methods of preying on organized society, their ferocious struggle with men paid to uphold the law, and the intimate side of their natures in following out impulses and emotions in love and hate provide the basis of the story written by Ben Hecht.

The climax is said to be extraordinarily thrilling, showing how a city street may take on the aspect of a battlefield, with police reserves rushing up to a house where a desperate gangster is trapped and has decided to die fighting. Searchlights, machine guns, grenades, automatic revolvers, shields and all the equipment of soldiery come into play when the house is stormed.

The gangland characters are portrayed by George Bancroft, gangster leader; Evelyn Brent, a girl whose moral consciousness is not awakened until she falls in love; Olive Brook, a man of good breeding; Larry Semon, a crook with a sense of comedy, and Fred Kohler, leader of a gang opposing Bancroft.

Josef von Sternberg, who directed the underworld drama, is said to have turned out a remarkably fine piece of work.

"MONTE CRISTO" TOPS ALAMO NO. 2 PROGRAM

No better evidence of the popularity of the team of John Gilbert and Renee Adoree could possibly be presented than the fact that the popular demand for these two stars has become so great that William Fox has revived the sensational screen hit of a few years ago, "Monte Cristo," from the pen of Alexander Dumas, in which these two stars play the leading roles. It will be shown for two days starting Monday at the Alamo No. 2 theater.

It is probable that no work of modern authors is as well known to the present-day followers of fiction as this tale of adventure despite the fact that it was written nearly a century ago. It has been read by millions throughout the world and has been translated into virtually every language. The late James O'Neill played the role of Edmond Dantes, the leading character of "Monte Cristo," for more than a quarter of a century, presenting it in all the small towns as well as all the big cities throughout the world.

Paul Panzer, now appearing in the newest Pathe serial "The Hawk of the Hills," in which Allene Ray and Walter Miller are starred, was also in the first serial ever made, "The Perils of Pauline," in which Pearl White was starred.

Comedy, Western Split Week Run On Rialto Bill

A comedy and a drama of the highest available quality are promised on the Rialto theater's program for this week.

"Clancy's Kosher Wedding," which will be the featured attraction on the program for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, stars George Sidney in another Irish-Jewish comedy said to be packed full of good humor. The children will have their inning of fun with this picture, previous criticisms indicate.

The picnic at the park with the riot that follows a fist-and-skull battle between the hero and the villain, and the gala and comical wedding scene mark the picture as thoroughly entertaining.

With "Clancy's Kosher Wedding" on the program for the first half of the week is the eleventh episode of "The Wisecrackers," a two-reel laugh festival entitled "Bee's Guest." Paramount newsreel will fill out the entertainment list.

"The Last Outlaw," Gary Cooper's second starring vehicle for Paramount, will be at the top of the program for Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the Rialto.

Cooper has the role of a sheriff in "The Last Outlaw." Betty Jewel is "the last outlaw," for whom he rides on Flash, "the wonder horse." Billy Butts, child actor, and Jack Luden, graduate of the Paramount Picture school, play other important roles in this new westerner.

A Billy Dooley comedy, "Row, Sailor, Row," will be on the program for the latter half of the week with "The Last Outlaw."

FLAMING YOUTH ET AL. FOR CAPITOL SCREEN

If youth doesn't flame all over the screen at the Capitol theater this week, the management wants to know the reason why, for its feature film is called "The Joy Girl," Olive Borden, youngest and most radiant of the new Fox screen stars, is its principal luminary and Fox, the producers, describe the picture as an "epic of the jazz age."

Quite naturally the work being an intimate glimpse into the upper reaches of the social whirl where things move at a giddy pace, the scenes of "The Joy Girl" are laid in both New York, where society speeds in the summer and in Florida where it flies in the winter.

Miss Borden, of course, is a stenographer with social aspirations and gets all involved in the upper crust only to discover that she's fallen in love with a chauffeur, who in turn is finally revealed of the most hotsy totsy of all the beau mondains.

The producers say that it isn't a deep story but it's an amusing story. It is said to be replete with Palm Beach beauties and Broadway sirens and the like and to be presented by one of the most notable casts ever to appear in a single screen production. In addition to the lovely Miss Borden, there are Marie Dressler, the famous comedienne, Mary Alden, the celebrated screen mother, and Neil Hamilton, beau ideal of leading men.

GOOD SCREEN FARE ON MADISON MENU

Excellent entertainment throughout the week is promised by a glance at the billing for this week at the new Madison theater in East Atlanta, with a number of the biggest first-run hits of the season, on the schedule. "The Black Diamond Express," stirring railroad drama featuring Monte Blue will be shown on Monday only. "The Shamrock Handicap" is the feature for Tuesday.

Lon Chaney in "When Bearcat Went Dry," presenting the famous character actor in a new role, is the screen feature on Wednesday only at the new Madison. "A Night of Love," conceded to be one of the greatest love stories ever filmed, and featuring the screen's most famous pair of lovers, Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky will be shown on Thursday and Friday. "The Silent Rider," a western of the "thriller" type is the Saturday feature.

The temperature at Redock reaches 110 in the shade during the summer months and the huge troup is experiencing the realism of desert heat and discomforts as they enact the realism of desert warfare.

GRAND BOOKS 'PARADE' FOR POPULAR PRICES

That classic of all war films, "The Big Parade," which has scored a world-wide success, will be the feature picture offering at Loew's Grand theater during the week of September 19. In this engagement this stupendous film will be presented in Atlanta for the first time at popular prices. Hitherto it has appeared in the legitimate theaters of the country at a top price of $2 a ticket.

In "The Big Parade" Laurence Stalling, author, literally has depicted the palpitating heart of the American soldier during the world war and has painted a picture so graphic that it holds the spectators in their seats with its sheer intensity. It is a stirring drama, a bubbling comedy and a gripping romance all in one.

Popular John Gilbert appears in the role which won him a stellar position on the screen, while Renee Adoree plays the leading feminine role. Both these stars really began the highroad to success as a result of the great reception their work in "The Big Parade" received from the American public.

Much of the comedy is in the hands of Karl Dano, Robert Ober and Tom O'Brien and they keep plenty of light relief in the action to offset the tensely drawn scenes from the battle front.

COMEDY DRAMA FILM AT KEITH'S GEORGIA

The "Gingham Girl," with Lois Wilson and George K. Arthur in the feature roles, comes to Keith's Georgia theater this week and is said to be one of the best of the comedy dramas yet shown at this popular theater.

This is the same "Gingham Girl" which a few years ago had long runs as a theatrical production and played for more than a year in Broadway. Lois Wilson has the character of Mary Thompson, the girl who discovers how to bake "cookies" while George K. Arthur, as Johnnie Cousins, the wise-cracking youngster is admirable in the part. Both eventually go to the city and the inevitable love triangle develops. Mary becomes the head of the Bluebird Cookie factory and it is many months later before she and her young and small-town sweetheart meet again. The action of "The Gingham Girl" is sure to please as it is said to move along swiftly and connectedly. There are many "shots" showing the interiors of night clubs and studios in Greenwich Village and elsewhere. A cast that is large and imposing insures plenty of action and the screen version of this clever stage play has been receiving excellent criticism everywhere, being one of the recent big hits of the Capitol theater, New York.

DRAMA OF OLD WEST PLAYS TUDOR 3 DAYS

"Sundown," which plays the Tudor on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, is an epic drama of the passing of the old west and the coming of the new. Many pictures have been made telling wonderful stories of the hardy pioneers who won the west from the savages, made homes there, and of the coming of the cattlemen; but "Sundown" tells still a different story. It is that of the onrush of civilization which swept the cattlemen away, and of their valiant efforts to retain their grazing lands and vast herds.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday Ken Maynard, new western star, whose meteroic rise to screen success is accredited to the excellence of his pictures, appears in his latest, "Somewhere in Sonora." It is the story of a man sent on a mission of great danger, "below the line," in search of the wayward son of a rancher.

JACKIE'S NEW FILM ON GRAND SCREEN

All previous efforts of Jackie Coogan to entertain are said to have been surpassed by this talented young screen star in his latest picture "The Bugle Call," a story of American frontier life which comes as the feature picture attraction at Loew's Grand theater this week. Young Coogan grows in ability as he grows in years and he is seen as an ideal typification of the spirit of adventurous American youth in his new vehicle. He is supported by a company which includes Claire Windsor and Herbert Rawlinson.

Just as "The Big Parade" took the love of a boy and a girl, and surrounded it with the surge and thunder of war to achieve one of the epic dramas of the day, so has "The Bugle Call" taken the problem of a child's life—of motherhood and stepmotherhood—and, with battle and spectacle surrounding it, gives an audience a glimpse into the heart of America's childhood.

This is what Jackie Coogan's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vehicle has done—he has voiced the plea of the thousands of children with stepparents.

It is all done in a sort of fairy story—a romantic tale of Indians and adventure—but underneath the thrills, the spectacle, the adventure and a great deal of comedy—there is said to be a mighty lesson to American parents.

Jackie plays an orphaned son of an army captain, stationed on the frontier in a cavalry post in the 70's, when the United States cavalry carved a path for western settlers over the historic Bozeman trail.

Desert Scenes Realistic.

John Waters, director, and Gary Cooper, the star, of "Beau Sabreur," Paramount's new Foreign Legion picture being made as a sequel to "Beau Geste" head a company of 1,500 now at Redock, on the Mojave desert, where scenes of the mountain pass fighting, one of the most thrilling chapters of Percival Wren's novel, are being filmed.

STAGE

Aw, gwan, now, you know you know Roscoe! The famous "Fatty" himself, in person, absolutely not a motion picture, will be seen on the Loew's Grand bill this week. On the upper right is the "Carnival of Venice" at the Capitol. The young lady so demurely perched on the table is none other than Edith Griffith, on the Howard bill this week, and she's probably the greatest exponent of personality the town has ever seen. The Trevor Sisters, featured at the Georgia, are shown next.

ORPHEUM UNIT SHOW IS KEITH FEATURE

Starting Monday the first of the fall season's "unit shows" will be presented at Keith's Georgia with a cast of 25 artists and comedians, to be shown as the stage attraction in addition to "The Gingham Girl," featuring Lois Wilson and George K. Arthur on the screen.

In the current attraction which is billed as "Orpheum Road Show Number Seven" there are a number of principals well known in musical comedy as well as vaudeville. Enhanced by Lee Wong's Chinese orchestra and beautiful girls for the chorus numbers, this presentation is said to be the equal of any regular production.

Eddie Shubert, well-known comedian, is one of the featured players and presents a specialty entitled "Not So Long Ago," in which he is assisted by Leon Leonard and the chorus. John Monroe and Tom Grant are the eccentric comedians with the unit production and have some special laugh numbers that have been featured with Broadway productions.

Lee Wong's Chinese orchestra is all that the name implies and comes in for a great deal of praise for their handling of American jazz and syncopated melodies. This is the closing feature of the show and enables the entire cast to appear in an Oriental setting, "Ling Ting Foo," which, translated, means beautiful garden. With a typical Chinese setting and costumes the Chinese orchestra supplies the genuine atmosphere of the Far East. In this specialty the Trevor sisters, singers and dancers, have conspicuous parts and with the assistance of the six little tea maids, present a series of dance numbers that are said to be most artistic.

"20th Century Minstrel."

Buddy Doyle, the 20th century minstrel, after several season in musical comedy, has returned to vaudeville and is given a prominent part in the show, presenting his conception of current topics of the day and some songs.

Madaline Patrice, a violinist, who also sings, will be heard in a program. "Singing violinists," while few in number, have always been well received. The special ability required to master the violin and cultivate a pleasing voice gives such gifted artists advantage over their less favored sisters, and Madaline Patrice is no exception. "Orpheum Unit Number Seven," with its special scenery and lighting effects, is said to be unusually attractive throughout and should prove as entertaining in Atlanta as elsewhere.

FAMOUS FUNNYMAN TOPS LOEW'S GRAND

The ex-king of all screen funmakers, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, whose antics have created gales of laughter in all corners of the globe, will appear in person for one week in Atlanta this week as the headline attraction on the vaudeville bill at Loew's Grand theater. This is said to be the final personal tour to be made by the famous comedian before he reenters the pictures.

Those who recall the old Arbuckle comedies will remember the cyclones of laughter that swept the theaters every time the rotund funmaker appeared. Arbuckle is one of the most resourceful comedians who ever appeared before the public and he developed nearly all his fun himself. He is funny both on the screen and on the stage, a combination hard to find in most comedians.

Prior to his appearance as the leading featured comedian of the big comedies he had made good as a comedian on the legitimate stage and also in the vaudeville stage. He will bring an act to Atlanta that is a veritable tornado of laughter and fun, according to the opinion of the critics in other cities in the south in which the famous comedian has appeared on his present tour.

In every city he has visited in the south Arbuckle has been given a cordial welcome. The comedian is working hard day and night to please the public and to attain a high rank as an entertainer and the success of his present tour indicates that he is destined for many more big things on the stage and on the screen.

Early training as a comedian in the old Mack Sennett comedies started "Fatty" on the road to success as a star and for fast and furious fun his comedies have seldom been surpassed even by the great comedians now on the stage.

In his vaudeville act "Fatty" brings a line of fun and with his jovial and genial personality he puts his work over with a bang. There are four other acts on the bill and Arbuckle appears in them from time to time.

Other acts on the bill with Arbuckle are Burns and Kane in a comedy, "Broadcasting;" the Parisian Trio, in "Moving Inn;" Siegel and Robertson, the "Show Boat Boys," and Joe Small's "Seven Stylish Steppers."

Collects Classics.

Norma Talmadge has her own five-foot shelf of books in her beach home at Santa Monica, Calif. The emotional star, who recently completed a modern screen "Camille," has included in her library the books of Balzac, Dickens, Emerson, Stevens, Daudet, Ellen Terry's Biography, Bernhardt's Memoirs, Maeterlink's "Treasures of the Humble," Steven's "Crock of Gold," Andersen's "Fairy Tales," Roland's "Jean Christopher" and "Les Miserables." This last book is her favorite. Miss Talmadge's "Camille," which visualizes the celebrated classic in the present time, was produced by Joseph M. Schenck for First National. Fred Niblo directed the new feature.

Before the CURTAIN

By ELMO HAMBY

Another reason why Commodore Al Short, of the Howard stage band, is real big-time, was discovered by your correspondent the past week, and incidentally that word "discovered" is of special significance since the ordinary entertainer would have hemorrhages of press agent copy over matters of far less import.

"Mr. Short is industrious. Offhand, that has not semblance of news, but it is, in the particular meaning which will be stated herein.

To begin at the beginning which may or not be the proper place to start, the Howard stage show of the past week was below the average. Very much so. But does our Al sit down and let the show flop simply because Chicago sent him no talent? No, sir! He sets out and works up a band program that is sufficient to make one forget the lack of stage talent.

On Sunday night at the matinee his principal orchestra selection was "H. M. S. Pinafore," which went over fairly well. Monday, this was changed to a brass sextette from "Lucia," which was received much better, but things still weren't to the energetic Al's liking. Following "Lucia" he changed to the 'Poet and Peasant," with cello part predominant, and this "wowed" the audiences on its first playing.

Then "Al, for Short," after having worked up the desired excellent program, rested on his heels.

Marcus Loew.

The death of Marcus Loew is felt to lesser extent here in the "provinces" simply because, with the exception of local showmen, no one knew of his character, disposition or his works, or of the great respect and esteem in which he was held by amusement people.

It is in the actors' trade publications such as "Variety" and "Billboard" that we find the overwhelming grief of the stage people expressed, and what greater tribute could be paid a man than such expressions by those who have worked for him?

The Film's Fat Boy.

Monsieur Arbuckle, late of the cinema, and soon to return to the films, according to announcement, will be the center of stage interest this week in his appearance at Loew's Grand theater. 'Fatty" seems slated for a sure comeback in the picture world. His appearance here will, no doubt, bring corresponding joy to the Grand treasury, as the act of Gene Austin did to Keith's Georgia the past week. And Jackie Coogan's "Bugle Call" on the screen isn't going to keep anyone away, either.

Unit Show.

"Orpheum Road Show No. 7" is the title of an unusually promising offering at Keith's Georgia this week, it being of the unit show type, and to remind those who do not recall, the unit show is more or less of a miniature musical comedy.

The idea was received here with instantaneous popularity on its inception at the Georgia several months ago, and Manager Eggleston evidently intends to catch the cash customers on the rebound from Gene Austin and draw them in to the unit show.

And he probably will.

Mr. Semon Goes After 'Em.

One of the most meritorious advance billings ever made by a local vaudeville house is that of the Capitol theater for this season. Opening up with Vincent Lopez and his orchestra in a couple of weeks, others to follow are Sophie Tucker, Waring's Pennsylvanians, Rae Samuels and other acts which are all out of the usual type seen here.

Manager "Marty" Semon fully intends to make "Atlanta's Finest Theater" the leading vaudeville house in town, and if he pursues the booking of such talent as is announced for the next few weeks, he will give somebody a very, very hot race for the honors.

MELODRAMA COMEDY AT PONCE DE LEON

Thrilling melodrama, interspersed with comedy is on the bill for the Ponce de Leon theater this week with "Other Women's Husbands," a light farce comedy starring Marie Prevost and Monte Blue opening the week's program on Monday only. "That Model From Paris," another success, with light comedy as its motive, starring Bert Lytell and Marceline Day is on the slate for Tuesday only.

Madge Bellamy, scintillating lady of the screen is due to bring unusual entertainment to the Ponce de Leon on Wednesday only with the showing of "The Telephone Girl." Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky are featured in "The Winning of Barbara Worth," the Harold Bell Wright story, on Thursday and Friday. To close the bill with a bang, Rin-tin-tin in "While London Sleeps," his greatest picture will be shown on Saturday.

JAZZ AGAIN FEATURES HOWARD STAGE SHOW

Indorsed by the management as the greatest of the new Publix de luxe revues, "Gems of Jazz" opens its engagement at the Howard theater tomorrow as the stage feature on the program with the Paramount screen special, "Underworld."

Edith Griffith, "The Personality Girl," known to Howard patrons as a charming singer, makes her second appearance in Atlanta with this production. This means that she has "It."

Ruth Stanley and Luella Lee, "California Sunkist Girls," are clog waltz dancers. They have both appeared in many popular musical comedies both in New York and on the west coast and are said to give the lie to the old adage, "Beautiful But Dumb."

Ross and Gilbert, who offer "Comedy With a Capital C," are said to be laugh record-breakers. This will be their first appearance in Atlanta. Davy White, who presents "Dance of the D. T's," is here to prove his record also. Dave Jones, "Just a Nut," made a particular hit at the Howard a short while back in a "Winegar Woiks" makeup.

Particular mention is being made of the fact that all the elaborate settings for "Gems of Jazz" were designed by John Murray Anderson, famous producer. Costumes for the six "Gem" dancing girls are also Anderson creations. Their dance, the "color wheel" dance, is said to be one of the most novel ever presented on the Howard stage.

The whole unit will be presented in combination with Al Short and the Howard melody boys, who will offer a number of musical specialties during the presentation.

GREAT CAPITOL BILL SEEN FOR THIS WEEK

"It Atlanta doesn't say that the act that Raymond Bond is bringing in here is the funniest act on the variety stage, then I don't know anything about vaudeville and I don't know anything about Atlanta and I've lived in Atlanta a lifetime, which has been most spent in vaudeville houses."

That's the way Willard C. Patterson, southern manager of Universal Chain Theaters, Inc., describes one of the features on the Pantages bill at the Capitol this week.

"I saw the Bond act at the Palace in New York just last week," said Mr. Patterson. "You know every vaudeville act works with an engagement at the Palace as the goal of its ambition. When an act gets to the Palace you can bet it's good. Well, the Bond act is all that and then some."

Bond is supported by the extremely attractive Helen Sullivan. The act is called "Good Night."

The headliner is Mme. Donatella, billed as the world's greatest tambourinist, in an act depicting Mardi Gras night in Venice, said to be one of the most colorful stage presentations on the vaudeville circuits. With her are such performers as Signor Pietro, Helen Pepi, Peggy Hanlon and the versatile instrumentalists.

A startling surprise act is billed as "Roy LaPearl, the World's Greatest Aerialist." Other acts on the bill are Franklin Bros., equilibrists and Doris Roone, "dainty delineator of humorous songs."

Adolphe Menjou's first notable success was in Charlie Chaplin's production, "A Woman of Paris." His newest Paramount starring picture is titled "A Gentleman of Paris."

Here's One 'Personality' Girl Who Is Just That

:: EDITH GRIFFITH RETURNS TO HOWARD ::

BY ELMO HAMBY.

It isn't often that actors and actresses do more than act the part. Their natural selves may be just the opposite of the role they play, and that may be one of the reasons why they are good actors.

The comedian, away from the stage, may be a morose and surly individual with a heavily pessimistic view of people and things in general; the blonde young juvenile may be the darkest-dyed villain off the "boards," and the sweet, demure leading lady may be entirely some other type when she isn't acting. "Personality" actresses may be anything else but that when they desert the footlights.

But exceptions make stories and so this is the story of one of the most personable "personality" singers that ever appeared on a local stage, and it also brings the tidings of her return here this week to the Howard theater.

It was several months ago that Edith Griffith made her first local appearance, occupying the headline spot on the Howard bill, and it was during the week of The Constitution-Publix opportunity contest, which necessitated the presence backstage of the writer each night during the contest.

He heard her offering every night and each of the performances was a shade different from the rest, so that on each occasion her songs were not the dull, dead affairs that might be expected of repetition. The answer was personality.

It was the same offstage. She chatted with the other performers, "kidded" with the stage hands and gave words of encouragement to the flock of stage-frightened girls in the contest. Her nature was "personality" as well as her billing.

She can take her place as the ranking exponent of the "personality" art that the writer has ever heard. And personality is not the total of her ability, since she has an excellent voice of the modern jazz singer type.

She captured her audiences on her first appearance and this announcement of her return showing this week with the Publix band unit, "Gems of Jozz," will be sufficient to bring those who heard her before out in flocks.

COMMUNITY THEATERS

TENTH STREET.

Madge Bellamy, one of the most beautiful of screen actresses, provides the entertainment in the initial attraction of the current week at the Tenth Street theater in "Sandy," the picture that so vividly reveals the contrast between the girl of the earlier day and the 1927 model flapper. "The Devil's Circus" is Wednesday's attraction at the Tenth Street, in which Norma Shearer has one of the most emotional roles of her brilliant career.

"Summer Bachelors" has been regarded by some folks as the most daring novel of this exciting age ever written. Its story is of vital interest to every person—man, woman and child—and as a picture in which Madge Bellamy has the leading role it has proven to be delightful entertainment. Fred Thomson in "Hands Across the Border" closes the week at the Tenth Street.

WEST END.

In the screen version of Sabatini's "Captain Blood" the West End brings to its patrons one of the most stupendous productions ever seen on the screen as its attraction for Monday and Tuesday. J. Warren Kerrigan has the role of Captain Blood, the buccaneer of the Spanish main. "The Magician," in which Alice Terry stars, is the feature for Wednesday. All scenes of "The Magician" were made by Ingram in Europe.

Harold Lloyd makes comedies that give the knockout blow to gloom, but it is safe to say that his latest, "The Kid Brother," which is on the West End screen Thursday and Friday, has proven his best chaser of the "blues."

Fred Thomson, ace of western stars, together with his horse, Silver King, closes the West End program on Saturday in "Lone Hand Saunders."

PALACE.

The play that made David Warfield, one of the intimate friends and associates of the late Marcus Loew, famous throughout the world as a great actor, comes to the Palace theater as the attraction for Monday and Tuesday of the current week. "The Auctioneer" was Warfield's first starring vehicle and overnight established him in the front rank of dramatic stars. The screen version of this great Belasco hit has been made with George Sidney in the role taken by Warfield. There has been a consistent note of similarity to all Thomas Meighan pictures of late with the exception on one, "Blind Alleys," booked at the Palace for Wednesday only.

Patrons of the Palace will have an opportunity during the current week on Thursday and Friday to judge of the versatility of Edmund Lowe when he will be seen in the leading role of the "The Fool." Bob Custer in "The Border Whirlwind" will be shown Saturday.

Erich von Stroheim's current production, "The Wedding March," is nearing completion. He is now engaged in cutting and editing it and has taken quarters in the Paramount studios to do the work. The picture will have a Paramount release.

A London pub has been reproduced at the Paramount studio for the next Emil Jannings picture, "Hitting for Heaven." Jack Burdette has been cast as the barrel house proprietor. The scene is in the London Soho district.

400 STUDENTS PRESENT AT BRENAU OPENING

Gainesville, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Brenau college opened Monday morning with one of the largest registrations in the history of the college. Thirty-two states and a foreign country are represented by over 400 students, with the number increasing every day.

After three days given to classification, the formal opening was held Thursday morning at 11 o'clock when the student body, faculty, members of the board of trustees and Gainesville friends met at chapel.

Dr. H. J. Pearce, president of the college, introduced the speakers who gave cogent messages of welcome to the girls. Hammond Johnson greeted the students in behalf of the Kiwanis club, Sidney Smith represented the chamber of commerce, Reverend Mr. Richardson extended the Rotarians' welcome and Reverend Mr. Leavell, pastor of the First Baptist church, gave an interesting talk. The invocation was by Dr. Wauchope, of the Presbyterian church.

Dr. Ben J. Potter, organist, who was greeted enthusiastically by the student body upon his return to the college after a year's absence, played several well-known selections.

Miss Mary Helen Forrest spoke in behalf of the student government, of which she is president, and Miss Florence Craig, president of the Y. W. C. A., gave a welcoming address. Following a talk by Dr. Pearce and the singing of "America," the students entered into active college life.

ECONOMY BRICK WALL DEVISED BY W. G. LASSETER

Marking a new departure in the field of construction and dedicated to the man who prefers a permanent home, fire resistant, inexpensive to maintain, easy to heat in winter and cool in summer, the economy brick wall has been devised, William G. Lasseter, secretary of the Southern Clay Products association, announced Saturday. The recent creation is proving that it is capable of meeting this demand, he said.

"There is nothing intricate about the economy wall," states Mr. Lasseter. "The most ordinary brick mason can build it. And it is peculiarly adapted to bungalows and the smaller class of homes for the average man. Laid of but one thickness of brick, four inches, it is reinforced at intervals between doors and windows with pilasters of brick laid in double thickness. Finally the entire inside of the wall is back-mortared, giving it the appearance of having been plastered. This back mortaring fills up any openings that may have been left and adds effectively to its heat retaining qualities in winter.

"The cost of such a wall is but little more than half as much as that of an ordinary 8-inch solid brick wall. As compared with concrete block this wall would cost 12c a square foot as against 26c for the concrete block, or 18c for hollow tile of 8-inch thickness."

The Southern Clay Products association, which is made up of the leading brick and tile manufacturers in this section of the country, will hold its next meeting in Macon on September 29. At this time the association's fall and winter educational program of "better building" will be discussed. W. E. Dunwody, of Macon, president of the association, who is also head of the National Hollow Tile Manufacturers' association, will preside at the sessions.

MONTEZUMA STUDENTS LEAVE FOR COLLEGES

Montezuma, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The local boys and girls leaving for the various colleges are: Estelle Walker, Elizabeth Harrison and Corinne Brooks to Wesleyan; Margaret Anderson, Elizabeth Rape, Minnie George Fokes, Mary Moore, Ruth Murray, Jewell Russell and Claudia Cheves to G. S. C. W. at Milledgeville; Minnie Jewell Taylor to Valdosta.

Bennett Adams, Earl McKenzie, Jr., George Averill, Frank Happ, Jack Smith, Jr., Marshall DeVaughn to Tech in Atlanta; Augustus Felton, John Felton, Allen Lockerman, Carl DeVaughn, Jr., William DeVaughn and Isaac Cheves to Mercer university; Bryan Alexander, Cleo Highsmith, Emory, and William Felton to Emory law school; Otis DeVaughn and Edwin McKenzie to Auburn at Auburn, Ala.; Malcolm Easterlin to University of Virginia at Charlottesville, Va.; Ralph Christopher to Young Harris institute, Young Harris; Redding DeVaughn to Riverside academy at Gainesville; Frank Lester and Sidney Moore to the University of Georgia, and James Lester to Georgia Tech.

$300,000 THEATER TO OPEN AT ALBANY

Albany, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Formal opening of Albany's new $300,000 picture and vaudeville house has been announced for Monday night, September 12, by Gortatowsky brothers, lessees. Parties from as far away as north Florida and southeast Alabama are planning to attend the opening, which will doubtless be marked by a capacity house.

It is declared that the Albany building is one of the finest picture houses to be found in a city of Albany's size. It was built by the estate of Sam Farkas for Gortatowsky brothers, who are understood to have signed a 25-year lease.

The new theater has a seating capacity of 1,800, with 1,100 seats on the first floor and 700 in the single balcony. The organ cost $1,800. Entrance to the theater is through an arcade containing eight two-room office suites and eight stores. The stage is one of the largest in the state and the dressing rooms include 19 individual ones and two large chorus rooms.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS ARE MADE AT NEWTON

Newton, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Many buildings and residences are being repaired by the owners in Newton and in a few months Newton will give an entire new appearance to the stranger.

The Odom building, occupied by Benjamin Kahn, is nearing completion. The entire front of the building has been remodeled and given a stucco finish, with two large glass show windows and paved walk in front of the store. The Norris building is being repaired and when completed will be on the same style as the Odom building, with paved sidewalk in front of the entire building.

Jernigan pharmacy is installing new fixtures for the soda fount and then the work is completed Dr. Jernigan states that he will serve fount drinks instead of bottle drinks. Jernigan pharmacy, Norris grocery store and H. H. Radford's store have already installed frigidaires in their stores.

W. R. Adams is remodeling his home and when completed will be one of the most attractive in the city.

"SHIPWRECKED" OPENS WEEK AT ALAMO NO. 1

A thrilling picture which reveals the dangers of the deep in a most human and startling manner will be shown at the Alamo No. 1 Monday and Tuesday. Seena Owen and Joseph Schildkraut in the greatest drama of the sea ever produced were filmed in the Pacific in a hurricane that wrought great damage and left wreckage in its wake. Don't miss "Shipwrecked."

Wednesday and Thursday Tom Tyler plays his best in "The Cowboy Musketeer." Also "The Perils of the Jungle" and Felix in "The Love Nest." Friday and Saturday brings the riding-est, fighting-est, nerviest screen sensation of a decade, Yakima Canutt in "Hellhounds of the plains."

"THE TELEPHONE GIRL" OPENS FAIRFAX BILL

The Fairfax theater has a popular offering for the coming week's bill, starting Monday with lovely Madge Bellamy in "The Telephone Girl," and assisted by Holbrook Blinn, Warner Baxter, May Allison and other stars.

Tuesday, Karl Dane and George K. Arthur, ably supported by Marceline Day, come in their funniest team comedy, "Rookies."

Richard Cortez, Lois Wilson and Estelle Taylor make their bow Wednesday in "New York," a vivid story of gay metropolitan life. Thursday and Friday, Gene Straton Porter's famous and popular story, "Laddie," plays. Lon Chaney appears Saturday in a throbbing melodrama, "When Bearcat Went Dry."

MORTUARY BUILDING PLANNED AT WAYCROSS

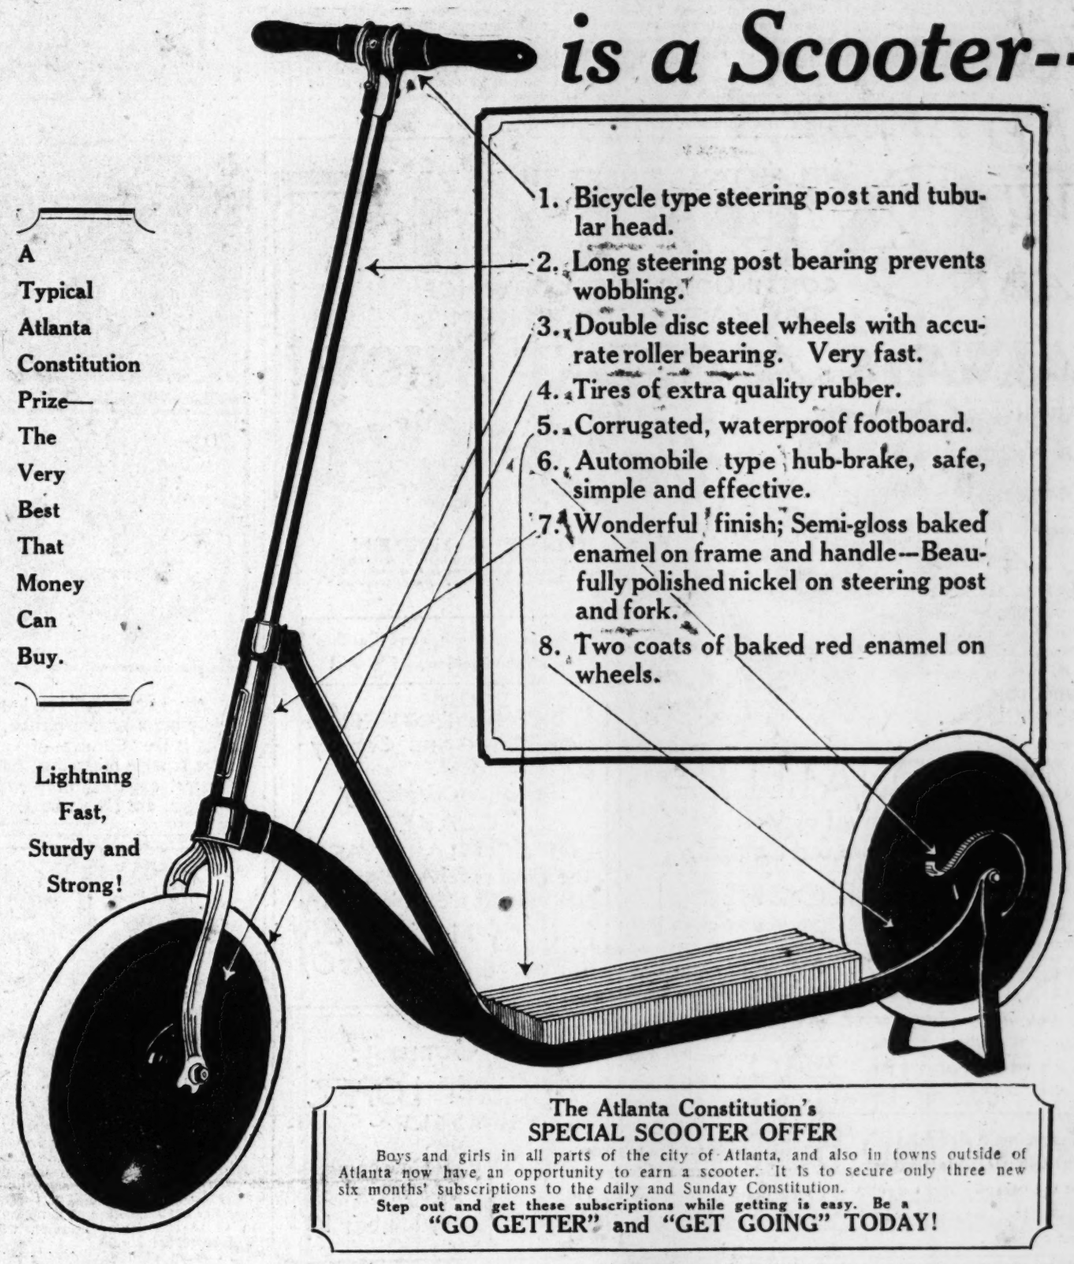

Waycross, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Architects are now drawing the plans for the undertaking establishment that is to be constructed on Mary street by W. L. Hinson. The contract is to be let as soon as the plans have been completed.

NATION LOOKS TO ARMY ENGINEERS TO SOLVE MISSISSIPPI FLOOD PROBLEM; THEY WILL DO IT, SAYS JADWIN; ONE OF WORLD'S BIGGEST TASKS

HIGHER LEVEES AND DEEPER AND WIDER CHANNEL ARE CONSIDERED

Parallel Auxiliary Channels Also Are Being Studied; St. Lawrence, With Great Lakes As Natural Reservoirs, Pointed Out As Perhaps Best Regulated River In World. Every Possible Means Looked Into.

By T. H. ALEXANDER

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is one of a series of articles on the builders of the modern South. The next will appear in an early issue.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 10.—"Can the army engineers control the Mississippi floods?" General Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army, was asked.

"They built the Panama Canal," answered Gen. Jadwin simply. It seemed a complete enough answer, but he amplified it.

"The canal was not attempted by the United States government until after years of discussion," he pointed out. "The government called upon the U. S. Army Engineers to complete this gigantic task. It now seems certain that the federal government is going to solve the Mississippi flood problem, and it will do it with the same engineers who built the Panama Canal and who execute all other work on rivers, canals and harbors."

The office of General Jadwin is located in the great Munition building which was erected during the World War to house the overflow of workers from the war department. In his organization, which is charged by law with the task of improving our seacoast harbors and navigable rivers, there now are 75 engineers—30 army officers and 45 civilians—who are engaged in working on a solution of the flood problem.

Study Flood Control Plan.

Day in and day out this corps of engineers, working under War Department supervision and supplementing the work of the Mississippi River Commission, is carrying on studies and research work. On or before December 1, it is the confident expectation of General Jadwin that the army engineers will be prepared with a plan of flood control which will forever hold in leash the great river draining two-thirds of the states.

Confidence of General Jadwin that his engineers will find a solution of the floods isn't confined to the Munitions building. Official Washington has no doubt of the ability of the engineers to work it out. It is a belief based on long years of justified confidence in the wisdom and ability of the engineers, one of the most colorful and fascinating branches of the nation's great war machine. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce and himself a great engineer, has ceased to worry about the solution of the problem. He expects the army engineers to come forward with a solution and he told me the other day that the army engineers, if given time and money, could build a canal from New York to San Francisco, if there was any benefit to accrue from such an undertaking.

But the engineers recognize that they face one of their biggest tasks in history. The plan of flood control will come after long months of weary study and experiments, for there is no precedent for such a gigantic undertaking on any of the rivers of the world. They are pioneering.

A Gigantic Problem.

"Briefly stated, the economic problem of the Mississippi river is to control and direct its waters so as to provide at low stages sufficient depths for navigation and, at the high stages, adequate protection from floods," said General Jadwin in answer to my question. "Nowhere in the world is there a similar problem of such magnitude."

And local levee boards aided by the federal government have been trying to curb the great river for almost half a century.

"In 1879," continued General Jadwin, "the federal government totally assumed the obligation of dealing with the problem and the Mississippi river commission was created as the federal agency for this purpose. This commission consists of seven members, three of whom are selected from the corps of engineers, U. S. Army, one from the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey and three from civil life. It operates under the direction of the secretary of war and the chief of engineers.

"Immediately after its creation the Mississippi river commission undertook the duty assigned to it by law, of developing a plan to protect the lands along the river from flood damage or to reduce such damages to a minimum.

"Exhaustive studies were made covering the advantages and limitations of all known means of flood control including reforestation. Reservoirs, outlets and spillways. It was found that the flood discharge of the lower Mississippi is over 2,000,000 cubic feet per second and that when the discharge exceeds 1,000,000 cubic feet per second the river overflows its banks and spreads out over the valley.

Begin Levee Work in 1882

"In order to reclaim and protect the fertile lands in the valley, the excess flow must be reduced in width from 50 miles to a narrow channel, sometimes less than a mile wide, and carried to the Gulf of Mexico in such a way that the regimen of the river will not be affected adversely for navigation purposes. After careful consideration it was decided that the only practicable means of accomplishing this was the construction of levees, a method of flood control which has been tested for centuries and used successfully on the Po, Rhine, Danube, Rhone and other rivers of Europe.

"With the approval of Congress levee work was begun in 1882 along the entire stretch of the lower river and is still in progress," continued General Jadwin. "Simultaneously there has been carried out bank revetment for the protection of levees and stabilization of the channel, also dredging operations improve navigation. As a result there is now a good navigable channel in the river below Cairo usually at least nine feet deep at all stages, and there are 1,815 miles of effective levees protecting against ordinary floods more than 16,000,000 acres of land."

"What precedents for this work were afforded in other countries?" I asked.

"When the Mississippi river commission began its work there were few if any precedents of practical value to serve as guides in a project of such magnitude," answered the chief of engineers.

"For many years appropriations were entirely inadequate an in later years when larger appropriations were forthcoming the amount that could be spent on levees was restricted by the requirement that local people should contribute an amount equal to half of that expended by the federal government.

Scope Has Been Limited.

"Under such circumstances the commission has never been in a position to plan to take care of the greatest possible flood but has had to carry out levee construction in such a way as to secure the greatest immediate results, changing its objective from time to time as the knowledge of flood conditions and the possibility of securing funds increased. In 1922 the objective was advanced to a project intended to provide against a flood slightly greater than that of 1913. This called for an expenditure in addition to that on work previously done, of $60,000,000 by the federal government at the rate of $10,000,000 per year beginning in 1924. Therefore when the present flood started only one half of the amount needed to complete the provisional project had been expended and there remained to be placed in the levee lines about 50,000,000 cubic yards of earth to bring them up to the provisional grade adopted after the flood of 1922.

"It is obvious," continued General Jadwin, "that a levee system designed to take care of a flood of the size of those of 1912-1913, still in an unfinished state, could not cope with the flood of 1927, the greatest ever experienced. It is however a source of gratification that it did completely protect over one third of the land which is subject to inundation, and that, in addition, it so delayed the action of the water in reaching the areas inundated that time was afforded for the rescue of life and property."

Jadwin Defines Floods.

General Jadwin, like Secretary Hoover, defines Mississippi floods in three clases—the usual floods, the larger floods and the really great floods. Hoove. eall them floods, abnormal floods and superfloods.

"The Mississippi levee system has reached a state of strength which protects completely against usual floods, gives a fair degree of protection against the larger floods which occur in an average of once in five years, and even reduces the areas inundated and losses incurred in the really great floods," said General Jadwin.

"Before the levees were built much of the land behind them could be bought for a dollar or two an acre, whereas today it is worth anywhere from $2e to $50 and even $100 per acre. The damage inflicted on this land by floods has increased in like proportion until the economic life of the entire country is affected. The situation must be met, analyzed and controlled. The time has come for a reconsideration of all known means of flood control and for a decision as to whether the present levee system shall be enlarged sufficiently to cope unaided with the greatest possible floods of the future or whether it shall be supplemented by other means.

He Was From the Flood.

"The need for a revision of the government project rests primarily on the following propositions," said General Jadwin in summing up.

"First, this flood has shown that protection must be furnished throughout against greater floods than those which existing works were expected to meet even if all works contemplated by the present authorization had been completed;

"Second, levees necessary for the protection of this great endangered region and not heretofore under the government jurisdiction should be brought thereunder;

"Third, the problem is now manifestly national;

"Fourth, the per centage of the participation of the heavily taxed districts must be reduced;

"Fifth, the law should be so modified that the government shall have sufficient definite authority promptly to locate the works where the soundest engineering indicates they should be built, whether this involves larger levees, some strengthened and spaced further apart, or spillways and reservoirs, or a combination of all these structures.

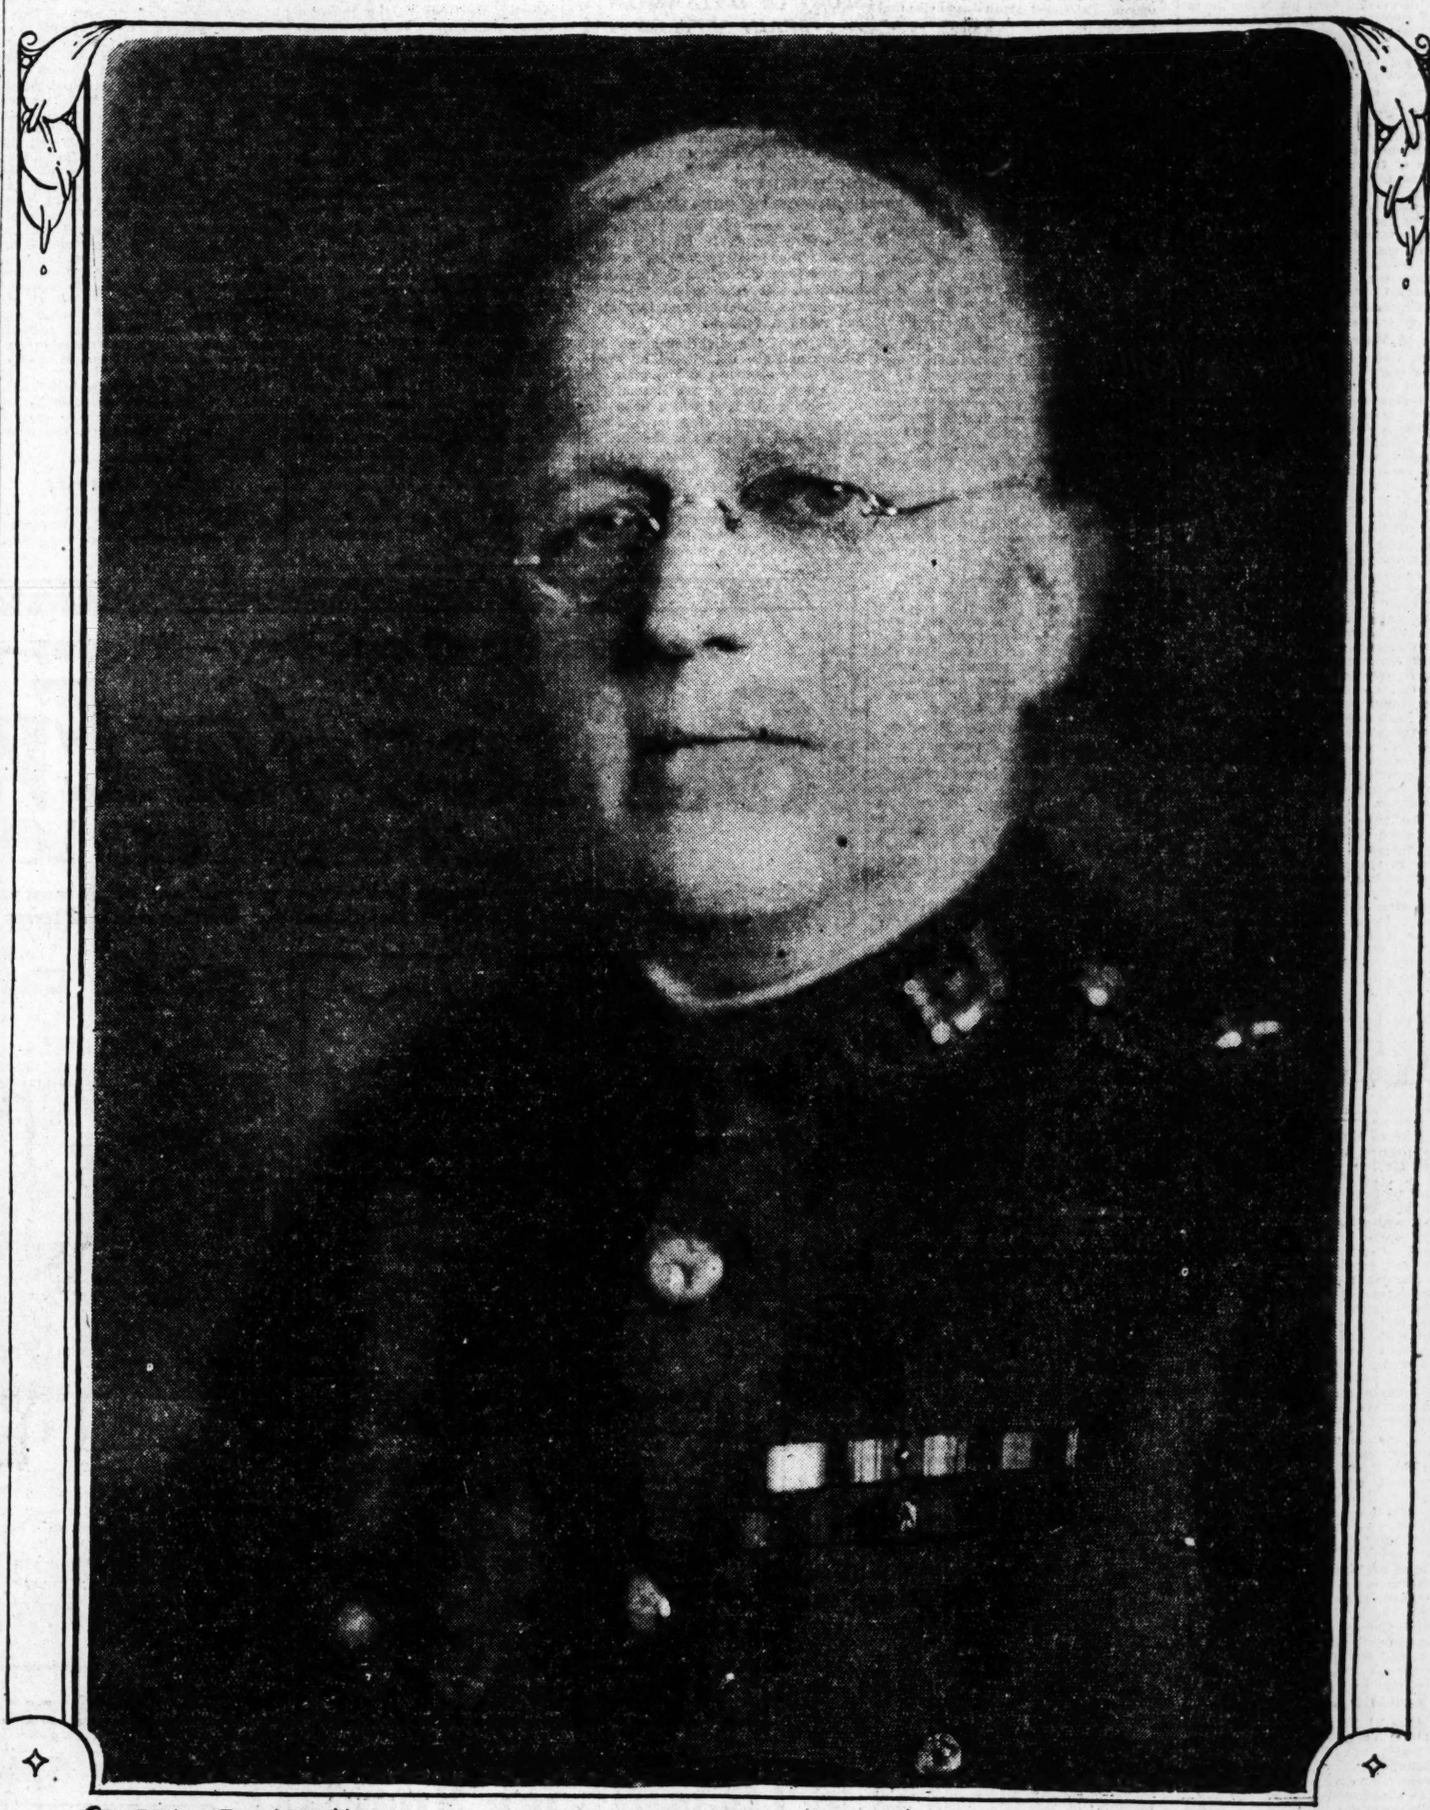

"We are now engaged in exhaustive studies necessary to a solution of the problem," added General Jadwin. "All these studies of the various phases of the problem of controlling the floods of the Mississippi river are being carried on assiduously. We have engaged on them at the present time some 75 engineers, about 30 of whom are officers and 45 are civilians. It is our intention to leave no stone unturned to find the most practical technical solution and it is our full expectation that we will be prepared with this sometime on or before December first."

Reforestration Not Solution

Back in 1844 the Mississippi had one of its worst floods and this has served as proof that reforestation alone can't control the flood waters for the northwest was then covered with virgin timber. It will take many years for trees to grow and the humus to form under them sufficiently for reforestation to be a real factor in flood control, General Jadwin points out.

"The floodway between the levees is enormous, but the 1927 flood has proved that it is not large enough," he said. "The problem is how to enlarge this floodway. Since the conditions are different in the several sections of the river, each section must be considered separately.

Seeks Permanent Solution to Mississippi River Flood Problem

GENERAL EDGAR JADWIN, WASHINGTON, CHIEF OF ENGINEERS U.S. ARMY WHOSE STAFF OF 75 ENGINEERS AND EXPERTS ARE BUSY SEEKING A SOLUTION OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOOD CONTROL.

75 EXPERTS SEEK WAY TO FIGHT OVERFLOW

Expect To Be Prepared On Or Before December 1 To Offer Plan Which Will Hold Water In Leash For All Time.

In general the floodway can be enlarged by—

"Digging deeper the present channel.

"Providing auxiliary parellel channels or by-passes.

"Widening present channel by moving back the existing levee line.

"Raising the present levees.

"Each method must be studied in the light of its cost, feasibility and effect."

General Jadwin sees the reservoir system as a fine solution of the floods if it can be applied at a reasonable cost. The St. Lawrence river, he points out, is perhaps the best regulated river in the world, because it is regulated through the natural reservoirs of the great lakes. The Mississippi carries about three times as much water as the St. Lawrence and therefore it would be necessary to secure great bodies of waters as reservoirs which are three times as large as the great lakes.

Gather Reservoir Data.

The basic data on headwater reservoirs are being gathered by 13 United States district engineer offices, scattered from Pittsburgh to Kansas City and from St. Paul to Vicksburg. On July 20, these districts had submitted reports on 257 possible reservoir sites, ranging from 33,000 to 6,800,000 acre-feet in capacity and from $290,000 to $104,800,000 in estimated cost. This by no means represents the total number that will be considered in the study of the reservoir question further reports are in preparation.

General Jadwin spikes two frequently quoted myths about the Mississippi, the first that the mountain stream tributaries of the Mississippi cause the floods and the second that the levees have gradually raised the bottom of the river so that it is now running in a long trough, above the level of the surrounding ground. It is the rainfall on the basin of the river itself that causes most of the high waters he points out. Rain in the Mississippi basin during March and April was largely responsible for the great flood of this year. Twenty-five inches of rain fell in many sections south of Memphis. The engineers found this rain-fall gradually diminished as they turned towards the east and west. Only six inches of rain fell beyond Pittsburgh, Dubuque, Sioux City and Guthrie. The Ohio river fell to such a low stage that it was necessary to raise the navigation dams in order to preserve navigation. In the flood of 1913, he pointed out, the waters south of Cairo would have been reduced only about two per cent if all the flood waters had been held back past Pittsburgh on the Ohio, St. Paul on the Misaissippi and Sioux City on the Missouri.

Elaborate surveys were made in 1921 and some 1,700 cross sections of the river between Carr Point, near Angola, La., and the Forts, just below New Orleans, actually measured and compared with cross sections at the same points determined 23 to 28 years before. These comparisons show definitely that below Red River the bed of the river has been practically stable for more than a quarter of a century.

"The waters concerned come from a great variety of states and inflict their damage primarily on a limited number—some seven," Gen. Jadwin told the flood control congress in Chicago in June, "at the same time we have an abiding confidence in the disposition of the country at large to treat all of its citizens fairly and to recognize that so great a threat hanging over the heads of seven sovereign states is in reality a threat and a challenge to the entire nation. It is less serious only than war itself, and must be met squarely and without delay by the nation as a whole."

W. C. WILKES RETURNS TO MORTGAGE BOND CO.

William Charles Wilkes has recently recome connected with the Mortgage Bond and Trus tcompany in the capacity of special representative. He was with this concern a few years ago in the capacity of bond salesman, but more recently has been district representative of the Walton school of Commerce for the state of Georgia.

The Mortgage Bond and Trust company is one of the strongest and best-known mortgage loan concerns in the south, being established in 1912. Commenting on the year so far, C. J. Lewis ,president, said that "although we have done the largest business of any concern in the vicinity and far exceeded our expectations, the demand for our collateral trust bonds by northern and eastern investment bankers is so great that we can hardly supply the demand. That is an important indication of the esteem with which investments in the south and especially in Atlanta, are held by investors throughout the country."

The company handles insurance, investments and mortgage loans. Its officers are C. J. Lewis, president; M. R. McClatchey and F. W. Patterson, vice presidents, and Charles Jerome, secretary-treasurer. Offices are located at Broad and Walton streets.

RENAISSANCE OF GA. RECALLS GOLD YEARS

Spalding was one of Georgia's earliest millionaires, and he put arms in the hands of 300 negroes and defied a British gunboat to land a raiding party on Sapeloe. There is a difference in men, but Spalding and Couper, the humanitarians and scientific farmers whose management of slaves was not subject to criticism, had families who lost their last dollars in the debacle of the civil war.

Coffin Buys Sapeloe.

Purchasing Sapeloe from a Georgia syndicate that had tried to make a replica of Jekyl there, Mr. Coffin had extensive plans for its development, but before he could get going the war was on the country. He did considerable farming there at long range at first, but the country's call for his services held him away. Under Thomas A. Edison's chairmanship Mr. Coffin was first a member of the naval consulting board of the United States in 1915. The next year he was chairman of the board's committee on industrial preparedness and in this capacity worked untiringly to coordinate and synchronize the efforts of 20,000 engineers and 30,000 industrial plants in preparation for the inevitable conflict. No governmental funds were available for this work and Mr. Coffin and his patriotic associates financed it. The then secretary of war made the statement of Howard Coffin that he had rendered "perhaps the greatest service that has been done for America by any private individual in the last 50 years."

Intense War Activities.

In 1916 Mr. Coffin was a member of the advisory commission of the council of national defense, a body of seven men made up of Daniel Willard, Julius Rosenwald, Bernard M. Baruch, Samuel Gompers, Dr. Hollis Godfrey, Dr. Franklin Martin and Howard E. Coffin. In his field, "munitions, manufacturing and industrial relations" fell such activities as the munitions standards board, the general munitions board, the automotive transport committee, the various aircraft boards and the public service committee. His work during the war made him an outstanding national figure, but it kept him away from Sapeloe except for short periods of rest under its quiet shades.

After the war came his numerous European trips looking into the progress of aviation, but always in the back of his mind were the things that he wanted to do on Sapeloe and for coastal Georgia, and at the first opportunity he turned his attention to the problem of reclamation. Where Thomas Spalding had established a practically perfect drainage system only long lines of trees marked canals and ditches that had once functioned adequately. The waterways themselves were filled with silt and no longer operated as drainage factors. The problem of restoring the ditches and drying the sodden fields interested Mr. Coffin tremendously as an engineer, and he put the matter up to the DuPont company for solution with explosives. Walter B. Alford, a Georgian, was in charge of dynamite demonstration work in this territory at the time, and he had already shown the ability which has made him known all over the country as the most capable ditch-blaster in the United States. The writer of this was in the same employ at the time and had under his observation the work of all the DuPont agricultural demonstrators. Walter Alford was sent to Sapeloe island at Mr. Coffin's request, and in two days' time solved the problem of efficiently and economically cleaning out old slave-dug canals and ditches to the original size and shape. Bulletins and moving pictures of this work have been used all over the world by the DuPonts since.

Varner Completes the Work.

To carry the work to completion Paul V. Varner, then a student at the Tenth District A. & M. school at Granite Hill, a youth of 18, was brought to Sapeloe. His experience was limited, but he had shown more ability than any man who had come under the observation of either Alford or the writer. Varner completed the reclamation work on Sapeloe to its present stage, excelling the pattern set him by the factory experts in many cases, enlarging old ditches where necessary and blasting new ones where needed. His services throughout were so satisfactory to Mr. Coffin that he gradually worked into the management of the Sapeloe properties and enterprises and is now vice president and general manager of the Sea Island company and Mr. Coffin's personal representative in all his southern relations.

The come-back, the renaissance rather, of coastal Georgia began with the reclamation work on Sapeloe. Had he not been able to unwater the island to suit his requirements it is unlikely that Mr. Coffin would have done more than hold it as a game preserve. As it is, he has built there one of the finest homes in the south; cooperated with the government in breeding new game birds; engaged extensively in the development of the seafood resources of neighboring waters; extended his cattle and sheep-raising operations, and entered upon a program of winter and summer resort development on St. Simons island near by that is the outstanding project in the south today.

As Thomas Spalding, Thomas Butler King and James Hamilton Couper, outstanding men and native born, a century ago believed that coastal Georgia is the fairest spot on the globe and made it so, Howard E. Coffin, Ohio-born, in the prime of life and of great wealth, looked beneath the desolation and saw a vision of what might be again. The sentimental appeal of the region took a tremendous hold on him from the beginning. The colorful history running back to Spanish days in 1566, known to so few Georgians, appealed to him with great force. The old Spalding tabby home is the heart of the Coffin mansion, built around and included within the modern creation of a great architect. That represents his personal attitude toward coastal Georgia; preserve its beauties; learn its history and build around it and on it until the section stands again where it stood a century ago—the fairest spot on God's foostool.

Colonel Tillinghast L. Huston.

When Tillinghast L. Huston was a boy roaming the hills of northern Georgia the tidewater region of the state, where his present operations are located, was an utter desolation. There is no desolation like that of an abandoned irrigation and drainage project where the waters have reclaimed their own and the signs of man's occupancy vanish utterly. The hills of Georgia claimed his boyhood and the mountain counties were his playground for many summers. His father, a well-known railroad builder of Cincinnati, made large investments in ore lands in Georgia and the family spent much time there. In all his world-wide travels Colonel Huston has always kept a strong sentimental interest in Georgia.

As a young man Colonel Huston was associated with his father in railroad construction in Cincinnati territory, and gradually widened his operations as he grew older until the visible evidence of his lifework was to be seen in many sections of the central west and the mountain regions where coal mining was making headway. Going to Cuba with a regiment of engineers in 1898 he established relations that after the close of the short conflict resulted in his adoption of Cuba as a field of operation later. For a long term of years he was engaged in construction in the new island republic, and great harbor works, railroads and industrial plants scattered over the island are today monuments to his genius as an engineering contractor, and the T. L. Huston Contracting company in those days stood in the forefront of American enterprise.

A Welcome Guest of Cuba.

In Cuba today his personal relations with the leaders of thought and action are such that when he drops in during the winter for a brief visit a sort of unofficial holiday is declared, the freedom of the city is his and Cuba looks upon him almost as an adopted son whose work revolutionized construction methods by showing that he would put into government work the full measure of value as though for a private client and that had not been the way of the Spaniard.

Colonel Huston had wide and varied activities that made him well-known to engineering, financial, transportation and industrial leaders throughout the country, but the United States at large came to know him well during a brief appearance in the field of sport as one of the owners of the New York American baseball team. Leading figures in the baseball world, players, managers and sports writers look upon him with great affection and flock around him in numbers during the winter. A gentleman sportsman of wealth and prominence he exerted an influence upon the great American game that many insiders regard as tremendously important and beneficial.

The importance of his entry into organized baseball from the Georgian standpoint is that it led to his return to Georgia as a winter resident later in life when he had practically retired from active business. He was the prime movant in the organization of the Dover Hall club and the purchase of the famous game preserve on Turtle river near Brunswick where notables in the world of sport and sporting literature foregather in winter. He has spent a number of seasons there and his interest in coastal Georgia grew with the passing years.

At the outbreak of the war Colonel Hutson was beyond the age of active military service, a bit overweight but his ability, experience and knowledge was such that his services were demanded at Washington. Executives of his age and type flocked to the capital to offer their services to the government without salary, but Colonel Huston went into active service as a captain of railroad engineers, went to France in that capacity, used all his knowledge of men, methods and materials in the vitally necessary operations that made the movement of men and supplies possible. He was promoted to major and then to lieutenant colonel, and his military associates say that his record of accomplishment was rarely equalled in the history of the A. E. F. He had built and repaired rail lines under shell fire; had carried on in person under weather conditions that daunted younger men and put the job through in the Huston way that had marked his long and active career in construction.

A volume might be written of the military experiences of the man whose fellows thought him foolish to go into the field when he could have served well at the desk, but who thought that if all the wisdom and experienced stayed safe in the bomb-proof office and left the task to the young and inexperienced trouble would come. There are stories of labor battalions that dropped picks and shovels and grabbed rifles from dead hands to fight back foraying Germans, but from Colonel Huston one gets only the humorous reminiscences of camp life and testimonials to the efficiency of the men who worked with him, over him and under him.

Colonel Huston Buys Champeney.

Several years ago Colonel Huston, at the suggestion of Captain J. S. Wright, of Brunswick, purchased Champeney island as a hunting ground for ducks. Rice culture there was abandoned in 1898, and had been only sporadic for many years before. Marshgrass grew where crops had once grown. Dikes were broken, ditches had filled with silt. None but natives with long memories would have suspected that there had ever been a great and productive plantation there. There was good ducking, and the colonel's yacht, Lena H, could make the run from Dover Hall in a few hours. The sporting side of the colonel's temperament was uppermost at the time. He had retired from business and had no idea of devoting his time and energy to any project anywhere.

Colonel Huston failed to reckon with that side of nature, which made a difficult engineering and construction problem a matter of absorbing interest to him. As his familiarity with Champeney island increased and he heard more of its long and interesting history of production and profit, the problem of reclamation began to get hold of him. He saw the remains of a combination drainage and irrigation system that has challenged the admiration of engineers all over the world. Methods brought to Tidewater Georgia from Holland by James Hamilton Couper more than a century ago and adapted to the unfailing water supply of a seven-foot tidal movement along this coast resulted in the reclamation of thousands of acres of the most fertile land in the United States.

Great Farming in the Old Days.

It was brought to Colonel Huston's notice that water-control was so complete on these old rice plantations that the stretch flow could be deepened daily as the rice plants grew so that only the tips were exposed but never submerged. Also that these plantations were laid out in squares of 20 net acres under tillage and that expense and production records were kept against each square from year to year, and that nowhere in agriculture had more science and more knowledge been applied to crop production than in these old plantations lying sodden and deserted, refuges for water fowl and fur-bearers, but no longer factors in the world's food supply.

The result of a year's ownership of Champeney island to Colonel Huston was that he felt a challenge to his engineering and contracting reputation. If coastal farmers more than a century ago could wrest these fertile lands from cypress swamps and river floods at a cost of at least a thousand dollars the acre with slave labor, and could dike and ditch them in a manner that approached engineering perfection, it seemed to him that an engineer who had built great harbor works, railroads and industrial plants could restore them economically and efficiently. Opinion changed to conviction and reclamation on Champeney took shape.

At this time all the old rice fields on Champeney island have been unwatered and the protection banks restored. On a large portion of the land first reclaimed successful truck crops have been grown, harvested and sold at a profit. The old home occupied at one time by the Barnwell family has been remodeled and restore for the occupancy of Colonel and Mrs. Huston. Around it grew in the early season the finest gladioli, pansies and narcissi that ever showed on Georgia soil. During the summer newly-set roses produced bloom that would have challenged the admiration of any hothouse grower for the fancy trade in the east. Along the levees Satsuma oranges; grapefruit, kumquats and other citrus fruits are growing vigorously, and peaches, pears, figs, pomegranates, blueberries and plums are making a fine showing.

Nipponese in the Delta.

To solve the problems of truck production on Champeney, Colonel Huston secured a group of Nipponese farmers from the Sacramento delta of California. They were familiar with delta soils and irrigation and drainage, but not with irrigation in a location with ample rainfall throughout the year. Also the old rice planters had needed only there inches of soil for their crop and had grubbed no deeper so that the truckers found their deep plowing obstructed by a perfect mat of cypress roots. The long sodden soil was rather difficult to subdue, but remarkable progress was made in a single year and results with tomatoes, cucumbers, egg plants, peppers and other crops were rather remarkable.

Reclamation costs on Champeney approximate $300 the acre, but the land is fertile, is irrigated and drained and its acre-value is a purely arbitrary figure. From the production standpoint it is theoretically the most valuable land in the whole south. It will produce the whole range of truck crops and will grow two crops of many of them in the same year. Colonel Husten has lately purchased. Butler's island just across the river and will continue his reclamation operations there. No other man in the whole south is making so notable a contribution to its agriculture.

Colonel R. E. Benedict, Forester.

The possibilities of reclamation on the Georgia coastal islands brought Howard E. Coffin into development work in the state; Colonel Tillinghast L. Huston found the reclamation of the delta rice plantations to present the opportunity for constructive work where others had not dared, and the third of the trio of distinguished engineers attracted to coastal Georgia is Lieutenant Colonel R. E. Benedict, late of the twentieth regiment of engineers, (forestry), of the American expeditionary force in France. For two years Colonel Benedict supervised the transformation of man-made pine forests in southern France into lumber, piling, crossties and the like for use in the war zone. He found in coastal Georgia nature producing pine under difficulty, but with results just as notable as the famous French reforestation projects.

Nebraskan-born of old New England stock, Colonel Benedict has had a most interesting career. Educated at the University of Nebraska he took up forestry as an avocation and soon entered the governmental service in this line. After some years of field work which took him into every nook and corner of the national forests and reserves of the far west, he went into the Washington office and finally became chief clerk to Gifford Pinchot during the stormy days of the conservation flight which centered around the explosive Pennsylvanian.

Wide Range of Experience.

Few men in the country are more familiar with timber and timber resources of the far west and slope than Colonel Benedict, who at one time had the supervision of numerous widely scattered parks and reservations. Horse-back or afoot he has covered hundreds of miles of mountain trails and spent weeks and months alone cruising timber on new reservations and visiting spots far removed from civilization. The outbreak of the war found him in British Columbia making a survey of the vast timber resources of that section, and at the entry of the United States into the conflict he entered the service at Camp Lewis, Wash., with the engineer organization that was recruited in the logging camps of the west, specialists and masters of their trade, organized and equipped for a specific purpose. How well this purpose was attained is a part of the history of the A. E. F., wherein many organizations accomplished great things in the unheralded zone behind the front line and made possible the success of the combat units.

After the war Colonel Benedict reentered forestry work along specialized lines, and three years ago came south as the representative of the George Hewitt Myers interests, investors in southern timber lands. After a wide survey of the Florida situation he came into coastal Georgia and after exhaustive investigation negotiated purchases which have aggregated approximately 100,000 acres in Glynn, Brantley, Wayne, Ware and Clinch counties. These investments are predicated upon his belief that the production of timber for turpentine and lumber is more rapid and more profitable along the coast and in the first levels of the coastal plain than elsewhere in the country.

Enters Upon Development Program.

Certain of the tracts purchased in Glynn county by the Brunswick Peninsula company, organized by Colonel Benedict, were of such soil types and so located as to be too valuable for reforestation. There were lands along Altama road from Brunswick to the Altamaha river that had all the advantages of urban location, electric current, telephones, pavement and artesian water, and were eminently adapted to the productiron of truck crops and for chicken ranches, horticultural operations and the like. These lands Colonel Benedict induced his associates to put into a development operation, although their original plans contemplated only investment for natural reforestation.

During his stay in Brunswick as the guiding factor of the Brunswick Peninsula company he has made for himself a place rarely attained by a newcomer in so short a time. He is a member of the Glynn county board of education, operating one of the most modern and adequate school system in the south, and at the same time one of the oldest, for Brunswick had free schools before the commonalty was supposed to be entitled to education. Also a member of the Kiwanis and the Young Men's club of Brunswick, and a director of the Georgia association, he has given much time and energy to promotive work and the community uplift.

Operations Show Fine Progress.

The development operation along Altama road has attracted several truckers from other states who have had notable results, and Fred A. Lyons, a California chicken rancher of much reputation in that state, has established there a poultry ranch along modern lines to soon have a capacity of 20,000 hens. The approaching season will see several orchards set there and the tide of improvements rises steadily along the famous road that is now a part of the Coastal highway.

This is the story down to now of three famous engineers known throughout the United States in their respective lines who saw under the surface of tidewater Georgia the glory that had been and the possibilities that can be realized. Each in his own way has already done notable work in his chosen line. Not content with merely pointing out the way to others each is utilizing capital, brains, skill and knowledge to make his own development successful and profitable in every respect, and from their operations coastal Georgia begins its start back to the proud eminence that it once occupied, the distinction of being the most highly developed agricultural area in the world.

STORY OF DAYS WHEN SPAIN SETTLED GA.

ship it is refreshing and inspiring to know that Georgia has furnished through one of her own young women such a marvelous contribution to the early white-man history of this state.

DR. KNIGHT'S STORY OF "BLOODY MARSH."

Let me conclude this brief summary with Dr. L. L. Knight's chapter on "Bloody Marsh," where a battle was fought in which Spain lost a continent. It is from his "Georgia Landmarks, Memorials and Legends," and reads as follows:

"Between the lighthouse at St. Simons and the old citadel of Frederica there stretches a low plain on which was staged a war drama, the far-reaching effect of which upon the subsequent fortunes of America hardly admits of a parallel in the history of the New World. Here, on July 7, 1742, was fought the historic battle of Bloody Marsh. To quote an authority whose opinion is universally respected, Thomas Carlyle, 'half the world was hidden in embryo under it;' and this wisest seer and clearest thinker of the 19th century further adds: 'The Yankee nation itself was involved, the greatest phenomenon of these ages.' The renowned Whitefield declared that Georgia's deliverance from the Spaniards at this time was to be paralleled 'only by some instances out of the Old Testament.' Said he: 'Certain it is that this battle, though well nigh forgotten, is one of the most glorious and decisive in the annals of our country. It determined that North America should be left to the exploitation of the Anglo-Saxon, the Celtic and the Teutonic races. Had success attended the Spaniards, they would have advanced upon the more northern settlements.' To quote an eminent jurist of this state, 'General Oglethorpe received from the governors of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina special letters congratulating him on his success and expressing gratitude to the Supreme Governor of Nations for placing the affairs of the colonies under the direction of a general so well qualified for the important trust.'

"In the ancient Spanish burial ground near Frederica lie the remains of some of the hapless victims who fell in this engagement, but the sacred area is choked with briars and brambles while, amid the damp undergrowth, hisses the vengeful snake. It is the announced plan of the Brunswick chapter of the D. A. R. at an early date to place appropriate markers on the historic field; and, in view of the ultimate significance of the battle here fought, it is more than likely that the hearty cooperation of the organization at large will be given them in this patriotic work.

"The disappearance of the Spanish flag on January 1, 1899, from the whole upper half of the western hemisphere, when the independence of Cuba was recognized by the government at Madrid, merely served to record the final issues of the great victory achieved by Oglethorpe when, with a force of six hundred men he inaugurated the era of Spain's downfall and gave the whole continent of North America to English civilization."

UNIVERSITY SCHOOL WILL OPEN MONDAY

The University School for Boys will begin its 32d session Monday morning at 8:30 o'clock, all preliminary plans for the opening having been completed, W. E. Dendy, president, announced Saturday.

Informal exercises will be held in the university chapel. Dr. W. H. Houghton, pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle, will conduct the devotional exercises, and Dr. E. A. Pound, state high school supervisor, will make the principal address. The school orchestra will render several numbers.

Schedules have been made in advance by members of the faculty and every student will get his schedule and books on Monday before dismissal. Regular work of the school will begin Tuesday. All pupils are urged to get an even start on opening day.

The faculty for the coming year consists of W. E. Dendy, president, department of English; G. W. Hodges, secretary and treasurer, French and Latin; H. L. Fuller, principal, headmaster of the lower school, teacher of physics; H. E. Phillips, Spanish and history; Fritz Orr, mathematics and science; George A. Sparrow, director of athletics, mathematics; Fritz Orr, A. B., of the University of Georgia, and George A. Sparrow, A. B., of the University of North Carolina, are new members of the faculty and are specially trained for the particular work they are undertaking in the school. Mr. Orr has had considerable experience in handling men at the university and in the summer camps of the Athens Y. M. C. A. Mr. Sparrow, the athletic director, not only starred on the varsity football team during his entire college career, but was especially strong in mathematics.

The school has recently been chartered and placed on a stable financial basis; the outlook is promising for a capacity attendance, the management states.

Strike Called Off.

Brisbane, Australia, September 10. (AP)—The strike of railwaymen throughout the Queensland was called off today.

DEVICE AS SMALL AS DIME CATCHES FAINTEST SOUNDS

For those whose hearing is subnormal and yet who are too sensitive to utilize the conspicuous, unsightly instruments which have been designed to overcome this handicap, there is shortly to become available, according to announcement Saturday by A. K. Hawkes company, a device with a receive ras small as a dime, free from all objectionable features, and at the same time unsurpassed in its ability to pick up the faintest sounds and make them audible to those whose sense of hearing is impaired.

"This device," says Mr. Sisson, of the Hawkes company, "produced after 25 years of unceasing research in this particular field by the Dictograph Products Corporation of New York, is the latest and perhaps the greatest achievement of the tireless group of dictograph scientists who have consistently sought to produce a hearing device as close to perfection as is humanly possible, and which will not repel the most sensitive."

It is sall "the silver anniversary model acousticon," and the earpiece, incredibly small, is made with a silver cap, which, bending with the flesh of the ear, is barely visible except at closest range.

Mr. Sisson announced that the silver anniversary model acousticon will be demonstrated for all who are interested at the office of A. K. Hawkes company, 67 Whitehall street.

PELLAGRA FOUND DUE TO INFECTION, SURGEON ASSERTS

Union City, Tenn., September 10. Data bearing out his contention that pellagra is due to infection rather than improper diet will be presented before the next annual meeting of the Walnut Log Medical society here by Dr. John T. Jelks, Memphis surgeon and specialist.

Dr. Jelks told the society yesterday that the "diet" theory was a "direct slander of the south and conditions prevailing in this section."

He was asked to work with Dr. R. L. Motley in preparation of a more comprehensive paper on the long-mooted question.

State and federal health authorities who recently began a campaign to abate an increase of pellagra in Tennessee counties affected by the Mississippi flood determined on use of diet elements for correction.

ATLANTANS TO ATTEND POWER MEET OCT. 13-15

The Atlanta Chamber of Commerce will appoint delegates to attend the Southern Appalachian power conference at Chattanooga, October 13-15, it was announced Saturday by R. S. Barker, executive vice president of the chamber.

The Chattanooga meeting, according to Mr. Barker, will consider the power problems of the south, such as the sufficient development of hydro-electric power to keep pace with the growth of the industrial south, the Muscle Shoals disposal controversy, flood control in its relations to power development, rural electrification and decentralization of industry.

A number of nationally famous speakers will address the conference, Mr. Barker said, including Secretary of Agriculture William Jardine, Governor Peay, of Tennessee; Richard Woods Edmonds, asociate editor of the Manufacturers Record, and perhaps President Coolidge, who has been invited.

"We believe that the Southern Appalachian power conference is of vital importance to the entire industrial south," Mr. Barker said. "If the south is to continue to attract and hold industry, plans must be formulated for increased production of uninterrupted and cheap electrical fuel. Unless this is done, geologists tell us that in little more than a decade our power facilities will have a greater load than they can carry. Such a condition is unthinkable, and it is urgent that it be avoided. The Chattanooga conference is mainly for the purpose of formulating necessary plans for additional power development and, of course, Atlanta is greatly interested."

LUTHIANIA RADICAL UPRISING SUPPRESSED

Kovno, Lithuania, September 10. (AP)—The government organ, the newspaper Lietuvis, claims that an uprising in the Memel district, asserted to have been undertaken by communists, was immediately suppressed. The paper adds that order prevails throughout the land.

The casualties were one killed and two wounded.

Over the Roads to Madison and Morgan County in New Nash 'Ambassador'

A fine chain of concrete roads will greet you as you enter Morgan county. This was made just out of Madison.

Dairy farming keeps this section in a very prosperous condition at all times. This photo shows the herd of just one Morgan county dairyman. Many more such farms are found all along the route.

The A. and M. college just out of Madison. It is one of the finest in the state.

Prosperous Farms at Every Turn Down Famous Georgia Road Route

BY H. M'COY VAN DEVENDER, Automobile Editor.

The last land cruise to spots of interest in Georgia by The Constitution's motor logging party last Sunday was a short one, but it did not lack in charming and historic setting.

The journey was from Atlanta to Madison down the line of the famous old Georgia railroad and through one of the richest agricultural sections in all Georgia. The road led through Decatur, Avondale Estates, Scottdale, Clarkston, Stone Mountain, Conyers, Lithonia and Covington, each of these cities affording keen interest to the observer with an eye for stately beauty of homes and great, shadowing trees above them.

The trip was made in a new Nash Ambassador, which carried us over the excellent roads with all the speed and comfort that the heart of an exacting motorist could possibly desire. The late Nash models are particularly graceful in action and efficient in performance, and the manufacturer has taken care of every detail looking to speed, refinement of detail, beauty of line and unfailing performance in every emergency.

Leaving Atlanta, the way led through Druid Hills, beautiful with the first touches of fall's brush evident in its luxuriant foliage, and over concrete and asphalt to Avondale Estates, where the dirt road began. We turned to the left at Avondale in order to go by way of Stone Mountain, and after leaving the scene where the Confederate memorial is being carved, again struck the road for Conyers.

Prior to this we had taken a few moments to go through the campus of Emory university, which is one of the most picturesque settings boasted by any southern college. Winding drives banked with wild and cultivated shrubbery, sylvan bridges and gulches teeming with ferns and other beautiful plants abound.

In the vicinity of Stone Mountain we saw the first traces of the state's richest granite quarrying section, and the stone-cutting operations continued in evidence until after we had passed Lithonia and headed into the open road for the county seat of New county.

Just before reaching Covington, we again veered from the straight route and drove the few miles to old Oxford, where was located Emory college before it became Emory university and was transferred to Atlanta. Here we saw Oxford academy and the magnificent old campus, rich in lore of youthful pranks of men who now are leaders of Georgia and who once attended classes at Emory.

Madison we found to be a beautiful city, with a bustling air like her sister, Covington. Both have prosperous business sections, and the home communities show a splendid taste for exterior decorating and beautifying. We spent the good part of an hour each riding about Covington and Madison, after which we turned for home.

On the return journey we went by way of Porterdale and were struck by the busy air of that thriving mill village and the care with which its grounds and buildings are kept up.

The trip was a delightful one. We recommend that you try it.

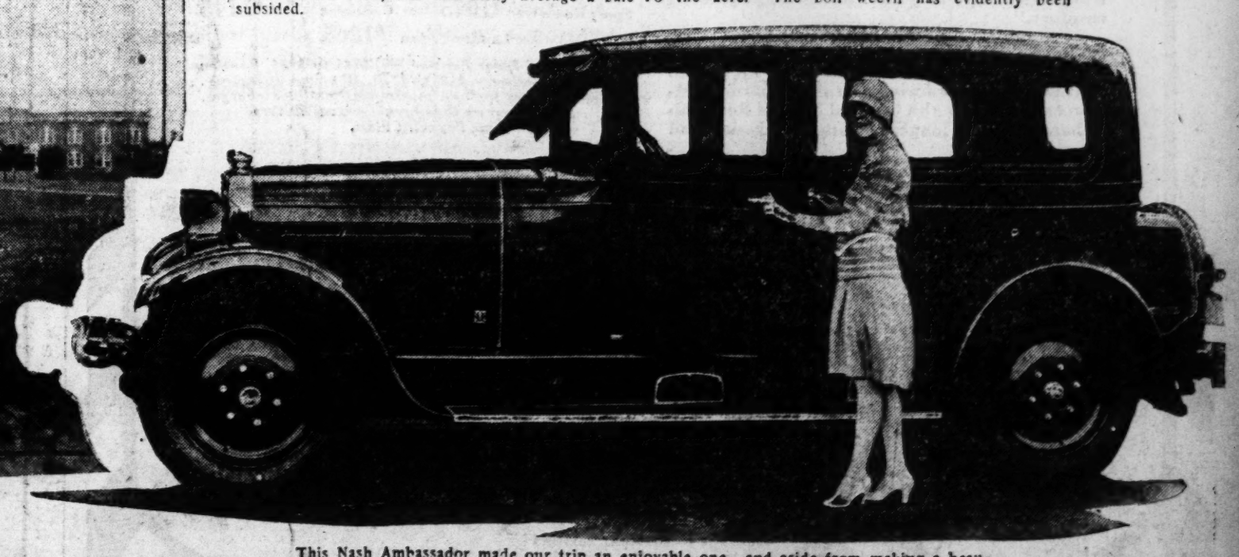

Constitution motorlogs and maps may be had in Atlanta at any of the following places: Ansley hotel, Aragon hotel, J. B. Anchors Auto company, Battery Sales company, Buick Motor company, Candler building garage, Cannon Motor company, Dobbs Tire company (three stores), Franklin Motor Car company, Georgian Terrace, Golden Eagle company, Hampton hotel, Henry Grady hotel, Ivy Street garage, Layfield's garage, Lee Tire service, Marion hotel, Nichols' Garage Service station, Piedmont hotel, Prior Tire company, Reed Oil company (22 stations), Southern Auto & Equipment company, Southern Bearing company, Stewart-Warner Products Service station, John Smith company (two stores), United Motor service, Winecoff hotel, Yarbrough-Mentzer company, York's Recreation parlor.

One side of Madison's famous square. Fine buildings and a very modern hotel is in the make-up of this thriving little city.

With cotton at 20c many farmers of Morgan county can stage a great comeback. This field was literally covered with bolls, and will easily average a bale to the acre. The boll weevil has evidently been subsided.

This Nash Ambassador made our trip an enjoyable one—and aside from making a beautiful picture, performs with a vim and vigor of the highest degree.

GENERAL MOTORS TRUCK COMPANY GETS PONTIAC DELIVERY

TO HANDLE DE LUXE DELIVERY TRUCKS AND SERVICE THEM

Change Will Be Effective Internationally Immediately, Officials of 2 Companies Announce.

Pontiac, Mich., September 10.—A joint statement issued by P. W. Seiler, president of the General Motors Truck company and A. R. Glancy, president of the Oakland Pontiac Motor Car company, states that the Pontiac six de luxe delivery truck will in the future be sold and serviced by General Motors truck branches, distributors and dealers, under the name of the General Motors de luxe delivery. The change is effective internationally immediately.

The increased demand for General Motors six-cylinder trucks made it advisable, according to the statement, for the General Motors Truck company to add another unit to its line. The Pontiac six, already an established success, was the logical truck for this purpose. On the strength of its showing on the General Motors proving ground and in the hands of owners, the General Motors Truck company secured it as a companion to its six cylinder Buick powered trucks. This means that the truck salesman for this company will be better able to meet the truck user's needs and provide him with the commercial unit that best fits his particular service. It permits the truck organization to offer a truck for practically every requirement as to kind of equipment and price. The General Motors Truck company in its expansion plans now offer trucks from one-half ton up to 15-ton capacity.

Recently Mr. Seiler, president of the truck organization, announced plans for the erection of a new $8,000,000 plant located in this city. Building operations on the plant are under way on a 24-hour working basis. Within the past year the company offered the trade a line of one and two-ton fast duty trucks equipped with the six cylinder Buick engine. Then came the statement that they would build a complete line of new bodies in their own plant for trucks. The heavy duty business of the company has progressed, according to P. L. Emerson, vice president, directing truck sales, to a satisfactory degree. The inauguration of a special equipment division of the sales organization, performing a specific service when special truck equipment is needed, has been of inestimable value to many truck customers. The securing of the Pontiac six de luxe delivery is another of the many achievements of this organization within the past year.

No basic mechanical change is contemplated in the Pontiac six de luxe delivery truck, which will be sold as a complete unit with a de luxe panel body or a de luxe screen body. The radiator is altered to the same style as now used on the one and two-ton General Motors trucks, fast duty models. The name plate becomes General Motors de luxe delivery.

This light delivery truck, it is stated, goes into the General Motors Truck company merchandising family with a good reputation for performance and owner satisfaction back of it. It has been known as the world's lowest priced six cylinder commercial car. It carries out for its field those same qualifications in fast duty work that has made the one and two-ton fast duty trucks of the General Motors Truck company line so popular. Its low, rakish body, in brilliant shades of duco, orange and blue, emphasizes its smart lines and gives to its owners that desirable feature in delivery—as advertising value for its owner's wares. The truck has had a favorable reception in a large sales way in such fields as department stores, electrical and general contractors, dyers and cleaners, bottlers, creameries and dairies, express and transfer companies, laundries, fruit and produce companies, bakers, hardware, municipalities, newspapers, plumbers and heating industry, wholesale grocers, florists, on the farm and in a number of other vocations. In fact, it is stated that it fits into the service of any kind of retail business that warrants a delivery service—increasing delivery range where pick up and quick delivery is required.

Olds Sets Australian Record

A new time record for long-distance motor travel through Australia, on roads that were made almost impassable by flooded streams and washouts, was completed recently when A. J. Dunkerley, of Melbourne, drove his Oldsmobile touring car the 3,380 miles from Darwin, Northern Territory, to Melbourne, in 7 days, 16 hours and 54 minutes.

IT CAN BE DONE BUT DON'T DO IT

As the motorist grows more familiar with his car, and its working parts become less of a mystery to him, he may be tempted to find out "what will happen" if he makes certain adjustments which are not advised by the manufacturer. For example, he may wonder what effect would be produced by starting in second gear, instead of low. Or he may have the mistaken idea that he can get more power by adjusting the carburetor so that the flow of gasoline is increased.

There is just one word of advice for the car owner who longs to "tinker" with his automobile, and that word it: Don't. It is easy—and less expensive—to find out "what will happen" by consulting the manager at an authorized service station.

The man who knows automotive machine will tell you that starting the car in second gear, instead of in low, is an excellent way to burn out the clutch, while adjusting the carburetor to increase the flow of gasoline may mean less efficiency, instead of more.

The ability to foresee the consequences of mechanical adjustments requires special technical training and actual experience with machinery. A person without such training and experience should not attempt to make adjustments. This does not mean that the automobile owner should be timid in caring for his car, but it does mean that he ought not to experiment without knowing just what he is doing.

ALL NASH PRODUCTION RECORDS ARE BROKEN

Kenosha, Wis., September 10.—August was the biggest single month in the history of the Nash Motors company. All previous records since the establishment of the company were swept aside during the month just ended and when the books were closed they revealed shipments of 18,027 cars while orders for August delivery totaled 20,201. This new high record following that of the previous month, which made it the biggest July in Nash history, is regarded by officials of the company as an overwhelming indorsement of three entirely new series of cars introduced by Nash on June 28.

"We feel that the August sales record is an eloquent expression of what the automobile buying public thinks of the Nash product," said E. H. McCarty, general sales manager of the Nash Motors company. "At no time since the announcement of the three new series of Nash cars has the factory been able to ship cars in quantities sufficient to meet the demand. At the end of the first month the factory was oversold and now, at the end of the second month, we are going into September against oversold in spite of increased production."

The new Nash line is composed of three series of cars in four wheelbase lengths. All are sixes and all are equipped with seven-bearing crankshaft motors.

THREE WOMEN CROSS DESERT IN SERIES '80'

Conquering sun-scorched desert and slippery, rain-soaked mountain grades, Mrs. Ferne G. Wilson, former prominent Oklahoma City society matron, now residing at Santa Monica, accompanied by her daughters, Misses Eleanor and Jane Wilson, recently drove her new Pierce-Arrow Series 80 brougham from Oklahoma City to Los Angeles, completing a jaunt of 1,652 miles in four days and four hours.

Mrs. Wilson said she made the trip to prove to her own satisfaction that she is a competent cross-country driver. Before starting, she had Roy Fisher, Pierce-Arrow's Oklahoma City distributor, communicate with William E. Bush, Pierce-Arrow's southern California distributor, who obtained a California license plate for her.

The first day, Mrs. Wilson stated, they drove to Hereford, Tex., 368 miles. They made 378 miles to Socorro, N. M., the second day. The next day the car climbed the Continental Divide and the party got some thrills. Heavy rains were encountered, making the mountain road very slippery and treacherous, but the party had no trouble. They made Winslow, Ariz., that night, logging 300 miles for the day.

Leaving Winslow at 7:30 o'clock next morning, they drove straight through to Los Angeles, a distance of 606 miles, stopping one hour at San Bernardino. Mrs. Wilson declared they enjoyed every minute of the trip, even on the slippery roads. While crossing the desert they had three punctures and changed tires themselves.

Mrs. Wilson drove much of the way herself, but at times was relieved by her daughters, who took turns at the wheel.

Nash Sport Roadster in Record Run

Seated in this Nash sport roadster are Jack Hill and Rogers Fuller, salesmen for the Dienelt Motor company, of Washington, D. C., who passed through Atlanta the past week on their way back from a record run of 30 hours and 14 minutes from Washington, D. C., to Miami, Fla.

NEW HUDSONS OPERATE ON ANY TYPE OF FUEL

Proof that Hudson Super-Six cars, with the new type high compression motor, will operate on any type fuel, was given in a recent test near St. Louis, Mo., where a Super-Six sedan was driven over varying roads at 40 miles an hour with kerosene as fuel. News of this demonstration has just been received by the Goldsmith-Becker company, Hudson-Essex dealer distributor here, from the Hudson Motor Car company.

With the test observed by newspaper representatives, the car operated as smoothly and satisfactorily on the kerosene as on high-test gas, according to the reports. Even on hills the low-test fuel is said to have presented no difficulties. A check-up showed that the big Super-Six sedan had averaged 15.1 miles per gallon of the kerosene. On the return trip to St. Louis, as a matter of comparison, the fuel was changed to ordinary gasoline; the car's mileage on this fuel was 17.9 miles to the gallon.

"The successful operation of this Hudson car on such extremely low-test fuel," said Mr. Becker, "is due to the new motor with which all Hudson Super-Six models are equipped—a high compression type engine designed for the consumption of 'any old gas.' What the Hudson did in this instance is due to new and exclusive features of modern high-compression design.

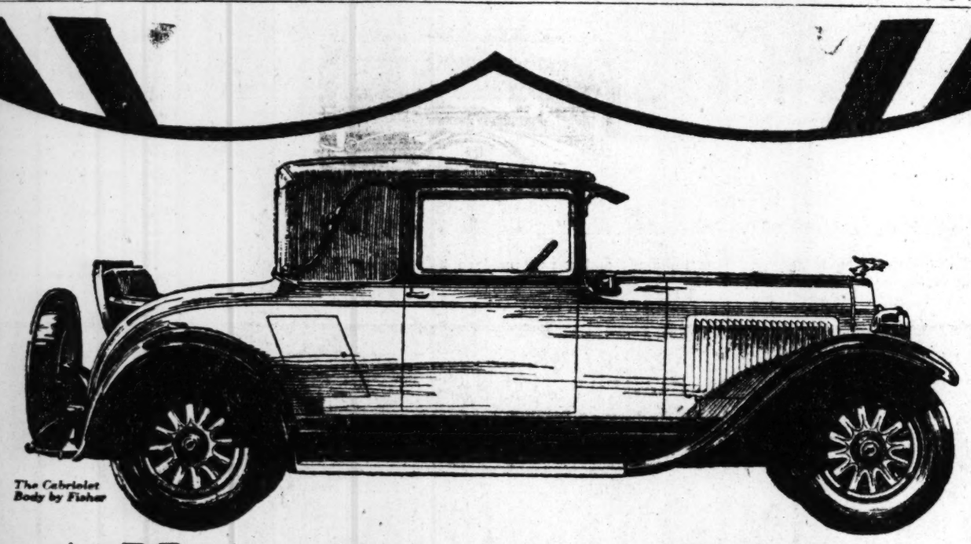

"The current Hudson and Essex motors are both of this high-compression type. While the Hudson motor is technically known as the F-head type and the Essex motor as the L-head, there distinctions are chiefly due to adapting designs to motor size. Both motors have the same results so far as the owner is concerned. Each motor is designed according to the requirements of its particular size.

"The trend toward motor car design is strongly in the direction of high-compression motors. Hudson and Essex have taken the lead in this field because the high compression motors designed by their engineers do not need premium-price fuels for successful operation. Any ordinary motor fuel purchased at any wayside station will bring satisfactory and even strikingly successful results. The cars provide an amazing standard of performance and a fuel economy which is the result of skilled and original design."

The origin of the phrase "watered stock" is given as an answered question in this week's Liberty. Daniel Drew, a shrewd farmer, drove his cattle from the Dutchess county farm to New York, feeding them a lot of salt on the way and then letting them drink all the water they wanted at the end of the journey. The stock was then sold by weight.

There are approximately 700,000 reputable words in the English language, according to an answered question in this week's Liberty. These do not include vernacular, obsolete, and vulgar words, which aggregate 300,000 more.

The Cabriolet Body by Fisher

A New American Car For All-America

No need of wasting a lot of words. No need taking a lot of time. Your eyes alone will tell you it's the new American car for all America—a brilliant interpretation of modern American motoring needs and American ideals of motor car beauty.

Length, grace and lowness in the new body creations by Fisher. A fashionable air of fleetness—an environment of luxury and richness. Distinction on the boulevard. Mastery on the road.

More than smoothness, more than snap, more than ample power for the steepest American hills and the roughest American roads. "Here he comes—there he goes. And 'there he goes' in comfort."

No magic, of course—and no untried engineering innovations. Just a big brute of an engine that laughs at hard work. Vital mechanical advancements from the General Motors Research Laboratories. A longer, stronger chassis. And months of testing at the General Motors Proving Ground.

New Models
Lower Prices

Two new models, a sedan and brougham, have just been added to the Paige line at lower prices, making a Paige six available for the first time for less than a thousand dollars.

Both cars are attractive, fast, comfortable, long lasting; and they bring a new economy to Paige ownership.

The introduction of these new models follows the substantial improvements on all Paige sixes and eights, and lower prices on ten of the twenty models, announced August fifth.

Paige improvements, affecting both bodies and chassis, add materially to appearance, and to the traditional performance and endurance of all the cars. Prices now range from $995 to $2665, f. o. b. Detroit. We invite your inspection.

BEAUTIFUL NEW DODGE CABRIOLET ON EXHIBIT HERE IS THIRD BODY TYPE IN DODGE NEW FOUR LINE

Lambeth-Eskridge Motor Company Shows Creation as Companion to Sedan and Coupe.

A beautiful cabriolet roadster is the third body type in Dodge brothers new line of fours. It is being formally introduced today by Lambeth Eskridge Motor Co., local Dodge brothers dealer, as a companion car to the sedan and coupe which have already attained such widespread popularity since their recent advent.

This cabriolet is typical of the new spirit which has characterized every car introduced this year by Dodge brothers and is suggestive of the pep and enthusiasm of youth. Its armory green body, low-hung and with the implication of great speed, is attractively designed and makes it fully as striking as anything on the road.

Performance is entirely in keeping with the smart appearance of the car. Few cars can match it in acceleration —0 to 25 miles per hour, through gears, in less than seven seconds—and no American four can pass it on the road.

The top is clamped to the windshield pillars and can be easily and quickly folded down. It is covered with heavy khaki top material which makes a striking color combination with the armory green of the body and the black fenders and shields. The seats are upholstered with green leather to harmonize with the predominant body color.

The rumble seat is wide and the leg room is more than ample for comfort. The cushions are thick and soft and art tilted at an angle which insures tireless riding.

Every convenience is embraced in its equipment which includes rear view mirror, stop slight, moto-meter, adjustable instrument-board lamp, adjustable drum-type headlamps, carburetor control adjustment, ignition switch with theft lock, crank-type window regulators, automatic windshield wiper, cowl ventilator and nickeled bumpers front and rear. The car is equipped with five wire wheels.

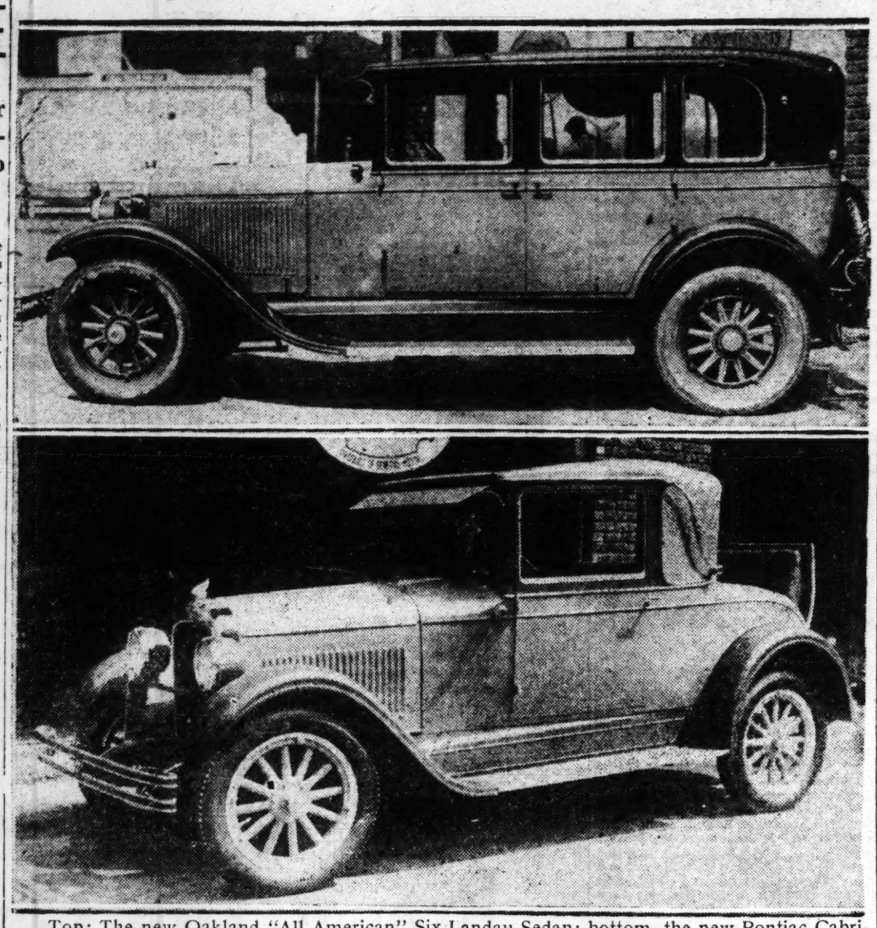

The windows are of fine plate glass in the new French style and all hardware is of select quality, heavily nickeled.

It is advisable to let a biting mosquito finish its meal, according to an answered question in this week's Liberty. The mosquito, it explains, first injects a poison to dilute the blood. When the meal is over the insect usually sucks the poison back again. It is this poison that causes the pain and swelling.

Brazil has the lowest rate of taxation, about $5 per individual per year, according to an answered question in this week's Liberty. In the United States the tax is about six times as great, and in Europe from 10 to 17 times.

The amount of blood in the average person is about 12 to 15 pounds, or one-thirteenth of the body weight, according to an answered question in this week's Liberty.

Whippet Cuts 15 Minutes From California Climb

Clipping 15 minutes off the record recently made by an eight-cylindered automobile, a strictly stock model Whippet Six coach set a new record a few days ago in a run from below sea level at Indio, in southern California, to a mile point up Mt. Baldy, a total distance of 119.8 miles. The dash was made in 2 hours, 17 minutes, the Whippet Six averaging 55.2 miles an hour.

The test was staged at the direction of officials of the Willys-Overland Pacific company to demonstrate the power and hill-climbing qualities of the Whippet Six. The car used in the test was not specially prepared, but is the same model used by the company as a demonstrator.

The Whippet Six was driven to Indio for the start with the temperature at 102 degrees. Timed officially by Los Angeles newspapermen, the Whippet Six got underway in the early morning hours. The first 42 miles was a steady climb until Beaumont was reached. From there to Redding the country was rolling.

The route carried the Whippet Six to San Bernardino and over the Foothill boulevard to Mountain avenue which leads up Mt. Baldy. From that point on the climb was steady and as the car penetrated farther into the mountains, stiff grades and curves were encountered.

All along the route the Whippet Six sped along in high gear. Its low center of gravity permitted it to swing around sharp turns with safety at high speed, the run being finished in 2 hours and 17 minutes.

At the end of the run an examination of the motor showed the water in the radiator to be at normal heat. At no time during the journey was there any evidence of boiling despite the high speed and the temperature on the desert, which was close to 100 degrees until after Whitewater was passed.

The driver made but two stops during the trip, those only to consult road guides. No mechanical adjustments were required and the engine was running as smoothly at the finish as at the time of the start.

PREDICTS KNIGHT MOTORS FOR RACING

Development of the racing automobile has been more rapid in the last five or six years than in the decade preceding that period, according to speed experts who have followed the trend of automotive design almost from the very beginning of this industry.

Fifteen years ago numerous racing cars were registered with a piston displacement of 1,200 cubic inches. By 1920 the size of the motors had been reduced to a maximum of 300 cubic inches. At the 500-mile classic in Indianapolis that year motors of 183 cubic inch displacement were introduced. This was followed by the 122-inch motors and only recently the 91 cubic inch cars were introduced.

Each time the size of the motors was reduced, the speed dropped slightly only to increase as the drivers became more thoroughly familiar with their cars. Eventually the former speeds were exceeded until today they have turned laps on some tracks well over 125 miles an hour—just double what the old type of racing cars attained.

In a majority of instances these races during the past decade have been tests of valves. It has been found in many cases that the high speed burns up the valves even when made of the highest grade of alloy steel.

One leading race driver already has definitely expressed the belief that in the near future racing cars will be built to use the Knight sleeve-valve motor as a means of doing away with valve troubles.

In this connection officials of the Falcon Motors Corporatio nog Detroit, builders of the Falcon-Knight six, declare that the Knight engine is noted for its cool operation, due largely to the fact that the cooling area of the valve surface is so great. Another factor that would contribute to less trouble in a race, it is pointed out, is the notably smoother operation of the Knight sleeve-valve engine. This factor is compared to the valve mechanism in poppet-valve cars which are prone to breakage and failure because of the incessant pounding it receives at high speeds.

Although extremely high speeds are unnecessary except on the race track, smooth working parts are just as important to the motorist who drives his car up steep mountain grades or across heated desert stretches as they are to the pilot of a racing car.

"Cool operation of an engine and long life are factors the car owner seeks at all times, because it is annoying to have to stop frequently for the renewal of radiator water, and naturally heating of the motor reduces materially the power available," declares John A. Nichols, Jr., president of the Falcon organization. "Such troubles are eliminated where the Knight sleeve-valve engine is employed."

Pontiac Party Greeted By Wild Mountain Sheep

"Nanny," four-year-old mountain sheep, one of the rarest creatures of Californian mountains, poses with Pontiac Six tourist.

Probably no one in California has a pet quite as unique as "Nanny," the prized possession of Mrs. A. R. Swarthout, of the Heart-Bar ranch, far back in the San Bernardino mountains at the headwaters of the Santa Ana river. "Nanny" is a four months' old desert mountain sheep, probably the wariest and most seldom seen of any of the wild creatures of the west, yet in spite of that hereditary background, there was never a puppy or kitten with a more trustful or friendly disposition than "Nanny" possesses toward the world in general, and toward Mrs. Swarthout in particular.

The Heart-Bar cattle range includes winter pasture on the Mojave desert near Old Woman Springs. Last April the Swarthout cowboys were out fixing up the cattle troughs at some of the more distant water holes on the range. One evening they were amazed to see a tiny creature about the size of a cottontail toddling into camp. It proved to be a baby mountain sheep, only a very few days old. They took it in to Mrs. Swarthout at Old Woman Springs. They improvised a nursing bottle with the end of a medicine dropper for a nipple, and "Nanny" thrived from the very start.

When the Heart-Bar outfit moved the cattle into the Big Meadows range for the summer in the San Bernardino mountains, "Nanny" went along, and it was there that a party of Pontiac tourists found her last week. She came out too greet the car much as a puppy would do, inspected it thoroughly, and climbed up in the seat and stood on the deck in the rear with perfect friendliness.

NUMBER OF CARS FOR BUSINESS INCREASED

Current output of automobile tires in Akron is over 140,000 units a day, according to H. Roger Jones, local Seiberling dealer. At the present rate of production Akron plants alone will produce and sell 65,000,000 casings and 75,000,000 tubes this year.

This remarkable output of the rubber companies is due, according to Mr. Jones, to the increased use of automobiles in business as well as for pleasure. The use of automobiles by business men in making calls in different cities has shown a great in- this year and has done more any one thing to increase the lence of two cars to each fam-

The growth of the Seiberling business this year among the car owners who have been replacing tires on their present car has followed quite logically the satisfactory results which business men have obtained on their cars. Seiberling commercial business, which is probably the most exacting of all tire accounts because of the hard daily usage, has always been larger than that of any other company, as far as the percentage of the total volume is concerned. Tires made by the new Seiberling water cure process this year, together with an increase of 20 per cent in the amount of rubber and of 25 per cent in cotton in each tire, have shown remarkable wearing qualities.

First—Buick took vibration out of the engine

Now—it has taken it out of the road

When Buick made its famous six-cylinder Valve-in-Head Engine vibrationless beyond belief, millions, the world over, hailed this startling advance in motor car performance as an engineering triumph.

Now Buick for 1928 has followed with another great contribution to motoring comfort. Buick has taken vibration out of the road by equipping every Buick with Hydraulic Shock Absorbers, front and rear—an added luxury that the savings of Buick volume have been able to supply.

Drive a Buick for 1928 over any road you choose. Bumpy, rutty, uneven highways —all ride smoothly, for Buick grades its own roads.

Buick's hydraulic shock absorbers made an integral part of the car by redesigning Buick springs and chassis—provide far greater smoothness than shock absorbers merely added as "extra equipment".

Come in! We will gladly put a Buick for 1928 at your disposal so that you may test this riding comfort for yourself.

CHRYSLERS WIN ANOTHER TROPHY

In the collection of trophies which have been won in Europe by Chrysler cars, one of unusual appropriateness has recently been added in Poland, according to advices just received by the local Chrysler dealer.

The trophy, which is a fine example of artistic modeling, represents a bison, the animal familiar to Americans as the buffalo, which within the memory of many still living roamed the western plains of this continent in herds numbering millions.

For 15 years, the Automobile Club of Poland has offered this trophy to any team of three cars which could finish its six-day reliability run without incurring penalties, or "black marks," but until this year none of the competing automobiles have been able to comply with the difficult conditions. It remained for three Chrysler "70's" to lift the prize so intimately associated with American backgrounds, in a competition which included teams of 11 well-known European and American makes.

Curiosity has often been aroused by the offer of a statuette which seemed so incongruous with European matters. Students of natural history explain, however, that the bison, no wasso-ciated exclusively with America, was once as common in Europe as until half a century ago it was in our own west. The fate of the species was the same in both continents, although extinction by advancing civilization was much later and far more rapid on this side of the Atlantic.

Caesar mentions the bison as abounding along with the now equally extinct auroch, or wild ox, in the forests of Germany and Belgium. Even as late as the Middle Ages it was still a familiar sight farther east in Europe and it is still found in a wild state in the Caucasus, although its appearance is very rare. A few herds are also kept in captivity in Lithuania and other northern countries, but these are small and are steadily dwindling.

The Automobile Club of Poland used the bison as a symbol of strength and endurance, which are the qualities associated with the animal where it is known in Europe. The donors of the trophy considered that the same qualities were indispensable to any car which could hope to win their prize under the difficult condition they imposed. The trials last over a period of six days, and a distance of 2,400 kilometers—about 1,500 miles—is covered over all possible kinds of roads and country. Speed and hill-climbing contests are included in the six-day program.

The buffalo trophy was won this year for the first time since it was offered, 15 years ago by a team of three stock Chrysler touring cars completing the entire six-day test without incurring any penalties. In addition, the three Chryslers won a prize offered by the Polish ministry of public works for cars finishing in the best mechanical condition, while a fourth Chrysler, included in a team of six cars entered by the army of Poland, took a prize offered by the army to any car driven by an army officer and finishing without any bad points.

NEWTON PUBLIC SCHOOL OPENS SESSION MONDAY

Newton, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The Newton public school will open next Monday. It was first announced that the opening would be last Monday, but considerable painting and repairs were necessary to the building, and on account of this work being delayed the school officials found it necessary to postpone the opening a week.

Professor T. L. Gamble, of Sycamore, who has been at the head of the school for several years, will again occupy this same place.

The following teachers have been elected: First and second grades, Miss Elsie Shaw, of Villa Rica; third and fourth grades, Mrs. C. O. Hall, of Newton; fifth and sixth grades, Miss Neva Jennings, of Albany; high school work, Miss Grace Whaley, of Sparta, and Mrs. T. L. Gamble; music, Miss Ollie Bowen, of Pelham.

CANADA'S "BABE" RUTH LEADS FAMOUS GIRLS' BASEBALL NINE

"Babe" Vincent, pitcher for Selberling Supremes, of Toronto, and known as the "Babe Ruth of Canada." When she hits 'em she hits 'em hard.

Both Babe and Her Friend Kay Have Won Many Trophies

CANADA has a "Babe" Ruth, too! In the Dominion women work and play baseball as well. There are two girls that are champions: "Babe" Vincent, pitcher for the Selberling Supremes, The Canadian National Champions in 1926 and 1927 has a curve and a batting record unequelled by the blonds across the border.

Her companion, Kay Flanagan, is left fielder on the same team, and holds two Canadian track records. She is the girls' champion in the half-mile run and 275 yard dash.

Both girls play on the team of the Selberling Rubber Company of Canada which recently invaded the United States. They were selected from the women's staff of the Toronto plant, where tires and rubber goods are made and shipped to all parts of the world.

The silver trophies won by this famous team are the envy of rivals from all parts of the Dominion.

Kay Flanagan, ladies champion athlete of Canada; left fielder on Selberling Supremes (Toronto); holder of 275 yd. dash and ½ mile Canadian records for girls.

GOLD MINING WORK ACTIVE AT DAHLONEGA

Dahlonega, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Gold mining activities in the Dahlonega section are very much in evidence and the operators expect work in the mines to start actively in a short time.

PIEDMONT ENROLLMENT BREAKS ALL RECORDS

Waycross, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The largest enrollment in the history of Piedmont institute is reported by President W. C. Carlton, the Baptist junior college having opened its doors for the 1927-28 session this week. The enrollment is made up of students from many states of the union, principally Georgia and Florida. The largest attendance is from Savannah, with many enrolled from Jacksonville.

The faculty is the largest ever known at Piedmont. It is as follows: Professor W. C. Carlton, president, English and Bible; Professor G. B. Connell, vice president, athletic director, mathematics; Professor C. C. Courson, assistant coach, history; Mrs. C. M. Raber, English and education; Mrs. W. C. Carlton, Latin and French; Mrs. E. P. Blackman, expression and voice; Miss Ellen Goodrich, pipe organ and piano; Miss Lillian E. Mickleboro, art and china painting; Miss Lucille Shaw, commerce; Miss Alma Gillis, domestic science; Dr. W. H. Rich, homiletics; W. C. Street, dormitory manager.

The lecture course will be as follows: Dr. B. H. Minnhew, history of medicine; Dr. Paul McGee, dentistry; Dr. George Atwood, preventable diseases; Colonel D. M. Parker and Colonel W. C. Parker, history of law; Jack Williams, journalism; Dr. W. H. Rich, true greatness; Judge H. D. Reed, local citizenry; Dr. R. L. Johnson, boyhood and girlhood; Charles N. Wilson, birds and nature study.

The board of trustees of Piedmont is selected from four Baptist associations of south Georgia, as follows:

Piedmont association: C. E. Gibson, R. C. Cavender, W. D. O'Quinn, W. C. Parker, I. T. Sweat, J. T. Gillis, R. D. Howard, E. L. Odum, J. C. White, W. Y. Smith, C. E. Stroupe, D. G. Caldwell.

Smyrna association: Melvin Tanner, Gray Meeks, J. H. Green and C. C. Giddens.

Consolation association: L. P. Granger, C. H. Parker, E. E. Miles, W. B. O'Quinn.

New Sunbury association: C. J. Smiley, J. E. Parker, Sr., J. S. Wilder and S. S. Mathis.

Proposal To Purchase City Hall at Waco Causes Court Case

Tallapoosa, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Judge J. F. Plummer, a member of the town council of Waco, Ga., and city tax collector at that place; Floyd I. Smith, also a member of the Waco council and of the finance committee of that body, and Jasper N. Hayes, a rural letter carrier at Waco, were arraigned Thursday before Judge L. G. Groover on a charge of embezzlement.

Mayor J. S. Jeter and Councilman T. J. Berrier, who is the other member of the council finance committee at Waco, appeared in the role of prosecutors in the case, and it was largely on their testimony that the three men were held for grand jury action. Their bonds were set at $200 each.

The case was the outgrowth of the proposal in the Waco council to buy for the sum of $350 a building to be used as a city hall. It was stated at the hearing that three members of council voted for the purchase, two against it and that Mayor Jeter vetoed the paper. Mayor Jeter said the deed for the house in question was later delivered to him, although he had vetoed the act calling for its purchase.

Mayor Jeter swore at the trial that he had made written demand for the return of the money and the abrogation of the trade and that the demand had been refused by the three men.

After more than a dozen witnesses had testified at the preliminary trial the justice here held the three men under bonds of $200 each and the matter will be threshed out before the next superior court grand jury.

BOY SCOUTS TO ENTER EXHIBIT AT WAYCROSS

Waycross, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—One of the most interesting exhibits at the Ware county fair in Waycross this fall will be the Boy Scout department, a schedule of prizes having been offered for scout handicraft.

Troop, patrol and individual exhibits from various units of the Okefenokee will be entered.

DAHLONEGA TAX RATE SET BY OFFICIALS

Dahlonega, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The city authorities of Dahlonega have set the tax rate for this year at $1.45 on the $100, 60 cents of it being for the graded school and 35 cents to apply on the water bonds. The city property valuation is $500,000.

DAHLONEGA COLLEGE IS RECEIVING CADETS

Dahlonega, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The North Georgia Agricultural college opening date has been set for September 13 but so many cadets have arrived that the dormitories have already opened for the reception of students.

The outlook for a big attendance and a successful session is seen for the college.

All lower classes have been eliminated and only college work will be done at the institution from now on, it is announced.

Old Camden County Buildings Deeded To Education Board

St. Marys, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The old courthouse, jail and jailer's residence have been deeded by the county officials to the county board of education and they will be used as an annex to the St. Marys high school and during the vacation season will be used as a camping headquarters for the boys' and girls' clubs of Camden and probably other counties.

These buildings will be used for educational purposes.

Butts County Schools Announce Faculties; Big Attendance Seen

Jackson, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—The teaching force for all schools in Butts county has been secured and ratified by the board of education. Some of the schools are opening during September but the majority will open on October 1. Last year there was an enrollment of more than 1,100 in the county schools, outside Jackson, and this figure will probably be passed this season. The following faculty has been elected for the various schools:

Jenkinsburg: H. G. McCants, Mrs. C. B. Harris, Misses Emmalou Childs, Janes Brownlee, Willie Woodward.

Towaliga Consolidated school: W. G. Jones, Mrs. Van Freeman, Misses Nellie Gossett, Ethel Carter, Georgialou Gibson, Gladys Weaver. Iron Springs Consolidated school: Henry Cunard, Mrs. H. L. Dodson, Misses Lorape Dodson, LaVert O'Neal. Floville: Edgar Dick, Mrs. E. R. Edwards, Miss Mabry.

Pepperton: Miss Eloise Bauchamp, Mrs. I. M. Wilson, Miss Nelle Rosser. Stark: Misses Anne Chapman, Jewel Holloway. Union Point: Miss Minerva Chapman. Worthville: Miss Margaret Maddox, Mrs. B. C. Cawthon, Fincherville: Misses Mattie Rose Smith, Kate Smith. Cedar Rock: Mrs. James Carmichael, Miss Willene Thornton. Cork: Mrs. Obie Watkins, Miss Sara Smith.

GRAHAM BROTHERS SEEKING GREATEST AUTO APPEAL

PAIGE-DETROIT CHIEFS ANALYZE PUBLIC DEMANDS

Robert C. Graham Visiting Dealers in All Parts of Country, Compiling Information.

With the same thoroughness with which they investigated the automobile industry before acquiring ownership control of Paige-Detroit Motor Car company, the three Graham brothers have been endeavoring to ascertain what particular motor car features appeal to the greatest number of motorists.

Not content to rely solely on questionnaires and the ordinary avenues for conducting investigations of this sort, Robert C. Graham, vice president of the Paige company, has been visiting dealers in all sections of the country in an effort to learn personally the preference of the American public.

Commenting on the findings that have come to light so far, Mr. Graham said:

"There is little question but that appearance, ease of handling, and comfort are the three factors of major consideration in the minds of most people when they buy a new motor car.

"This is, indeed, a changed situation from that which existed in the early days of the automobile industry. When we first began manufacturing motor cars, the public was apparently little interested in the appearance or comfort of their cars, nor did they object if the car was somewhat difficult to handle and drive.

"The chassis came in for much closer scrutiny in those days. The bore and stroke of the cylinders, horsepower, the kind of clutch used, the axle construction, these were the features that attracted most public attention.

"I do not believe for a moment," continued Mr. Graham, "that the public is any less interested in the mechanical construction of motor cars today than it was in the past. But this interest is not exressed as freely or as openly as the interest in color combinations, upholsteries, fittings and appointments.

"The reason for this, of course," observed Mr. Graham, "is found in the general improvement of motor mechanisms during the last few years to a point where the public has come to accept the products of leading motor car manufacturers as being of good quality and careful workmanship.

"Naturally, this attitude of the public imposes a serious obligation on motor car manufacturers. We at Paige realize this obligation fully. Since the public has accepted the quality and good workmanship of our product it is incumbent upon us to guard that workmanship zealously, improving both wherever and whenever possible."

These reflections verify the history of the three Graham brothers during their long association with the automotive industry. They have become known as careful builders of quality products, and have acquired a further reputation of being able to manufacture such a product at a price that makes it available for a great number of people.

That they are continuing this policy at Paige is evident in the improvements and lower prices that have already been announced. Paige dealers report steadily increasing sales throughout the country.

WALTER P. CHRYSLER'S TRAFFIC TALKS

CITIES SHOULD PLAN FUTURE

It is interesting to note that the city traffic conference held in Chicago under the auspices of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce stressed the importance of every city and town having a city planning commission which is taking steps now to be prepared to meet the requirements of double the amount of present day traffic volume. It is a curious fact that many towns feel that they have no need for such an organization and are neglecting to prepare now for what is inevitable, an increased number of motor vehicles,—passenger cars, busses and trucks.

No longer is one car sufficient to meet the needs of the average American family because this same family is now turning to one car for each of its members. Already 2,700,000 American families have found use and are using more than one car.

The time is coming surely when this country will see between 30,000,000 and 35,000,000 registered motor vehicles on its streets and highways. Large cities are making splendid progress in adapting themselves to the requirements of motor vehicular transportation. More than a billion dollars is available this year for the building of new roads and the widening and improvement of existing highways. Everything indicates that the country is preparing for more cars. But here and there are communities which seem to be content with conditions as they are and are not taking steps to prepare for the increased use of automobiles.

The growing community can wisely plan now to widen streets, build arterial highways, in prepartion for twice as much traffic volume as today.

It is a wise community which is planning its future. And planning for the future means meeting the requirements of additional motor transportation.

BOWDON STATE COLLEGE OPENS FALL SESSION

Bowdon, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Bowdon State college opened its seventh annual term this week with an unusually large enrollment from many counties of western Georgia. The opening exercises were attended by a large audience of Bowdon and Carroll county citizens, as well as many former students.

The principal address of welcome was made by Mrs. H. M. Bird, president of the fourth district federation of woman's clubs, and a prominent Bowdon citizen. Other addresses were made by Dr. George W. Camp, president of the college, and Hon. I. H. P. Beck, secretary of the board of trustees and a member of the Georgia assembly, whose efforts were largely responsible for the founding of the college. Devotional opening was conducted by Rev. G. B. Bowman, local Baptist pastor, and Rev. R. F. Elrod, pastor of the Bowdon Methodist church.

Announcement was made of the appointment of J. Q. Maxwell and C. K. Boroughs to the teaching staff. Professor Maxwell will head the foreign language department and Professor Boroughs will have work in English and history. Others members of the faculty have served one or more years.

A full summer session of college work is planned for this year, due to an increase in appropriation for this purpose by the last session of the Georgia assembly.

GREENSBORO SCHOOL HAS BIG ENROLLMENT

Greensboro, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Greensboro public school, Professor C. C. Wills, principal, with a corps of able teachers, opened the fall session this week with the largest enrollment in its history, necessitating an extra teacher in the primary grades.

The Parent-Teacher association, Mrs. E. Harvey Armor, president, is very active and the school equipment has been greatly added to in consequence. In the school auditorium are two oil paintings of Washington and Lee. The playgrounds have also been improved.

Air-Cooled Engines Hold European Air Attention

Handicapped by the Alps, which bar passage to all but experienced airmen, not even allowing these to cross on certain days, Italy has nevertheless instituted five airlines, on all but one of which Italian-built ships powered with foreign air-cooled engines are being used.

The annual display of the Royal Air Force of England at Hendon airdrome this year likewise showed a marked tendency toward air-cooling. Nine of the 15 ships in the display were powered with the Bristol air-cooled "Jupiters."

Interest in air-cooling was first stirred by Cobham's flights across India and Africa with an air-cooled motor in his ship. The flights of Lindbergh, Byrd, Chamberlin and the Hawaiian successes by use of air-cooled motors has greatly stimulated this interest.

Newspapers throughout the United Kingdom are receiving numerous inquiries about air-cooling as applied to aviation and automobile motors. Press comment generally is strongly in favor of air-cooling. John Prioleau states in a London evening paper, "Modern cooling systems are frankly prehistoric. The maintenance of a motor engine's efficient temperature under widely different conditions is still a problem whose solution is anxiously awaited by most of us.

"So far all our professional brains have been able to do for us is to provide too much cold and then invite us to reduce it by medieval means like cardigan waistcoats for radiators, or to control it with thermostats."

J. Graham Scott, motor editor of The Cape Times, of Cape Town, Union of South Africa, raises the question why the benefits of air-cooling have not been adopted generally by automobile manufacturers. "The only full-sized car which incorporates an air-cooled engine today," he says, "is the American Franklin, and this car continues to give excellent service in various parts of the world."

Nash Springs Designed To Weight of Each Model

Exceptional riding comfort, a characteristic of each of the 21 new models recently introduced by Nash, is attributed to the new secret process alloy steel springs developed by Nash engineers.

These springs are a departure from the usual in that they are individually designed to the weight and size of each model, offering scientific resistance to road shocks and eliminating guesswork as to their effectiveness on all types of roads.

There are actually nine different types of Nash springs in all. These types were developed for cars in nine different classifications of weight, center of gravity, etc.

The alloy steel from which they are constructed is made by a secret process which produces a metal perfectly suited for the purpose of absorbing shocks. The spring action in the new Nash cars is said to duplicate in effect the action of the highest priced shock absorbers on the market. In designing these springs, Nash engineers succeeded in overcoming all of the various types of riding discomfort so common over modern roads, even including those annoying section joints in concrete.

Because of the remarkable results obtained with the new springs, the Nash Motors company recently conducted a national "Come Drive" week, to give as many people as possible a chance to try the riding qualities of the new cars. During this period Nash dealers throughout the country kept extra demonstrators on hand so that anyone who cared to drive one of the new models would be able to take a test ride.

During the period in which these tests were made by the public, Nash sales reached a total in July over 70 per cent greater than July, 1926. Orders received at the factory for August make it certain that this month will be the greatest single month in the history of the company.

What is probably the oldest known advertisement was inserted in an English newspaper of December 13, 1695, by a ship captain seeking an apprentice, according to an answered question in this week's Liberty.

REO FLYING CLOUD

She is the "Ideal" of the Engineers

SHE is not an eight nor a four but a six—the ideal engine, say the engineers.

— She is not 116" long, nor 126", but exactly 121"—the ideal length, say the engineers.

— She does not have a valve-in-head motor nor a sleeve valve motor, but an L-Head motor—the ideal type, say the engineers.

— She does not have cantilever springs, neither worm gear nor hypoid gear final drive, nor a four-bearing crankshaft, but she does have half-elliptic springs, spiral bevel gear final drive and a seven-bearing crankshaft—all ideal, say the engineers.

— She has none of the old and the obsolete, she does not offer you in 1927 the features of 1925, but from stem to stern, from roof to road, she is entirely new.

— No other car in the world today even approaches the Flying Cloud in its identity with the Engineers' Ideal Car.

— That is why a leading automotive paper has said that the Reo Flying Cloud is "the only feature in an otherwise colorless automobile season."

How 150 Automotive Engineers Agreed Upon An "Ideal" Motor Car

The Metropolitan Section of the Society of Automotive Engineers held a contest in January for the design of an "Ideal Car" for the American Family. 150 leading engineers competed and their specifications were synthetized into a composite set of specifications for an "Ideal Car"—that dream of all engineers.

Ask for the booklet, "They Have and You Can," which gives a detailed comparison of the Reo Flying Cloud and the "Ideal Car."

The Flying Cloud is a Pleasure Car

— She is a pleasure to see, to ride in, to drive, to own.

— She brings to motoring a thrill that mere passenger cars never had.

— She makes old cars obsolete and many of the newest dear at any price.

— Be sure to try one out. Then you'll understand why the engineers say that such a car is ideal. You'll know that a car rightly designed and built can give you more than transportation, can make traveling a pleasure at all times.

CADILAC IS PREPARED FOR SERVICING OF NEW CAR

PARTS AND TOOLS SUPPLIED AHEAD OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Foremen and Shopmen Fully Instructed and Service Organization Strengthened Throughout Nation.

At the time of the announcement of its new car, the Cadillac organization throughout the United States was as completely prepared for service on the new car as it was on the longer-established LaSalle and the earlier Cadillac models. A program, which included the strengthening of the personnel of service organizations in every part of the United States, instructions to service managers and shopmen, shipments of spare parts and necessary tools—all had been methodically carried out over a period of months. As a result, when distributors and dealers were ready to deliver the new cars, their service departments were fully prepared to give them the requisite service.

The program of preparation was an extensive one, and had been carried out to the smallest detail. Prior to the announcement of the new car, a convention of all of the company's United States distributors was called at the plant in Detroit. At their meetings a cut-open chassis, exposing every part for minute examination, was displayed and demonstrated. Slide films and instructive talks explained every important service operation.

A preliminary manual prepared at the plant was in the hands of the distributing organization. A force of field representatives of the service department were on the road equipped with first-hand knowledge of the new car, slide films showing service operations and complete printed and verbal information regarding service. Duplicates of the service films were in the hands of all distributors to be used in the instruction of shop men. A national convention has also been called for service representatives from every part of the country to gather in Detroit and make a detailed three-day study of the new car—September 27, 28 and 29.

On account of simplification of design in the new car, few additional service tools were required. These had been designed, manufactured and placed in service departments.

The completion of the organization for service for the new car also completed the installation of a new and comprehensive service system inaugurated a few months ago by Nicholas Dreystadt, Cadillac general service manager, a technically trained automobile engineer, who has specialized in service and shop methods. Prior to his Cadillac connection he spent seven years with the Mercedes organization in Germany, graduated from the Mercedes Technical school, and later from the Chicago Technical college and the Armour institute. He is a member of the Society of Automotive Engineers.

Mr. Dreystadt joined the Cadillac factory organization in February of 1926, after ten years of experience in charge of the service department of the company's Chicago branch. Before undertaking his new work, he spent eight months in first-hand study of Cadillac service conditions throughout the country, covering practically all distributor and many dealer points, and assisting in improvement of methods and economical and efficient service to Cadillac owners. He was appointed general service manager in September of the same year.

Under the new plan which Mr. Dreystadt inaugurated, service operations have been standardized so that any owner traveling in any part of the country can receive the same service as he would at the point of purchase.

Since the inauguration of the new policy seven months ago there has been an adherence to policy methods throughout the country which has been reflected in enthusiastic voluntary letters from owners.

Methods employed include the following: Service representatives of distributors and dealers are brought to the factory each year for instruction in service methods. A force of highly-trained representatives covers every important point throughout the country at frequent intervals, inspecting service stations, offering suggestions, giving instructions through classroom lectures and the use of films, and coming into personal contact with as many owners as possible.

Frequent detailed reports obtained from every distributor and covering every department of service are analyzed and assistance given on the correction of weak points. These reports cover dealers' personnel, percentage of Cadillac cars in the territory which are serviced by the authorized Cadillac dealers, the extent to which the service policy is followed, the dealer's facilities for giving service, and the satisfaction of local owners toward the service received and toward the performance of the car.

LUCY COBB INSTITUTE TO OPEN WEDNESDAY

Athens, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Lucy Cobb institute has presented a scene of activity during the past few weeks in preparation for the opening of the 69th session on Wednesday, September 14.

Monday and Tuesday will be registration day for local students and classification day for boarding students. Work of classifying will continue on Wednesday until finished and tentative class work will start Thursday morning. The faculty will arrive on Monday for their first faculty meeting on Monday night.

President Hollingsworth announces that he is highly pleased with the enrollment for the opening and particularly pleased with the new members of the faculty. There is a hopeful and optimistic air for an unusually good year.

The following instructors will be associated with Lucy Cobb this year for the first time in the several departments:

Miss Sarah P. Kelly, of Darlington, S. C., will be dean of students and head of the science department; Mrs. O. L. Teasley, of Atlanta, will be assistant dean and in charge of the infirmary; Miss Edna Timberlake, of Fredericksburg, Va., will head the department of English; Miss Laura Powers, of Baton Rouge, La., will be the head of the mathematics department; Miss Mattie Henderson, recently of South Carolina, but now of Athens, will be in charge of the home economics department; Miss Jewell Barham, of Shreveport, La., will have charge of the gymnasium and all athletic activities.

In the department of music, Hugh Hodgson, of Athens and Atlanta, will continue as director and will have as associate teachers, Miss Caroline Gray and Miss Mary Vic Mauk.

Miss Beulah Knapp, of Atlanta, will teach typing and shorthand, being a graduate of Crichton's business college.

17 Pupils Graduating At Thomasville Attend College This Session

Thomasville, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Seventeen members of the Thomasville High school graduating class of 1926-27, will attend college this year and are expected to leave within a few days. The list is as follows:

Edward Brown, to Emory university; Odis Johnson, to Auburn Polytechnic institute; Henry Mahler, to Washington and Lee university; Grace Chastain, to South Georgia college, Valdosta; Nannie Mae Crawford, to Georgia State college, Milledgeville; Farrar Elrod, to South Georgia college, Valdosta; Clara Hargrave, to South Georgia college, Valdosta; Alice Hicks and Elizabeth McClenny, to Wesleyan; Lillian McGavock and Martha Parker, to Peabody college, at Nashville; Marguerite Ryser, to South Georgia college, Valdosta; Newell Thornton, to State Normal school, Athens; Eunice Wimberly, to Peabody college, at Nashville; Rose Wood, to South Georgia college, Valdosta.

In addition to this list, a number of others will return for a continuation of their studies.

Cotton Seed Crushers' Body Employs Chemist To Develop Industry

Griffin, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Parks Walker, president and general manager of the Walker Brothers Oil company of Griffin, has received notice from the Interstate Cotton Seed Crushers' association telling of the appointment of a noted industrial chemist who will devote all of his time to discovering new uses for cotton seed.

"This means that cotton seed, once considered absolutely useless, except to plant, will become more and more a valuable commodity," said Mr. Walker.

"There was a time," he continued, "when cotton seed hulls and meal were not even fed to cattle and were thrown away. Legislatures in southern states went so far as to pass laws prohibiting farmers dumping cotton seed in streams.

"When one considers that cotton seed is bringing from $35 to $40 a ton, according to the market, grade, etc., one is surprised at such conditions as the above.

"Cotton seed has many uses today and it is the hope of this association that an even greater demand may be created for this byproduct of cotton."

BAKER COUNTY BOYS VISIT CAMP WILKINS

Newton, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Forty-four boys from Dougherty, Lee and Baker counties, accompanied by County Agent J. I. Davis and Assistant County Agent J. C. Morcock, have returned home after a week spent at Camp Wilkins, at the State College of Agriculture at Athens.

The entire party went from Albany in three school trucks.

The Baker county boys were Robert Hammil, Milton Rooks, Kerby Mathis, Wilson Mathis, Alma Hay, Bernard Walton, William Swann, J. B. Rentz, Clarence Ardd, William Kidd, Maynard Swann, L. F. Hines, Benjamin Frazier, J. C. West, Ben Hill Phillips, Earl Mercer and Earl Jordan.

Sullivan and Johnson New Oakland Officials

Atlanta district offices of the Oakland Motor Car company, which controls factory interests of Oakland and Pontiac cars in Georgia, Florida, Alabama and portions of several other states, has been placed under direction of W. A. Sullivan as district manager and T. K. Johnson, assistant district manager.

Mr. Sullivan, whose experience in the automobile business has included factory positions in which the nation was his field, comes to Atlanta from Charlotte, N. C., where he was in charge of the Oakland district office. Mr. Johnson, until recently, was branch manager in Atlanta for the Olds Motor Works.

The Atlanta district offices in the Wynne-Claughton building keep a staff of 17 men, including accounting and service experts, on the road attending to interests of Oakland-Pontiac dealers throughout the southeastern territory. This is one of 22 such offices in the Oakland organization.

The new district manager Saturday expressed himself as enthusiastic over prospects for the Oakland and Pontiac lines in Atlanta and throughout the territory.

"The dealer organization in the southeast is growing rapidly," Mr. Sullivan said. "Oakland and Pontiac sales are especially good now in Georgia and Alabama. We expect the present heavy sales volume, which is far ahead of the factory's production capacity, to continue well into the winter."

Mr. Sullivan has been with Oakland about eight years, formerly holding the post of advertising manager for the factory and serving several years as special sales representative, when his field covered the United States. He began his career as a reporter on the Detroit News.

92-Year-Old Negro, Former Toombs Slave, Harvests Good Crop

Sparta, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Hale and hearty and so much so that with slight assistance, no more than required by the average two-horse farmer in Hancock county, he was able to cultivate a two-horse farm successfully and profitably this year, "Uncle Jim" Mills, ante-bellum negro, 92 years of age, who at one time was the slave property of General Robert Toombs, was here Thursday afternoon with a bale of cotton grown on his farm to be ginned and sold.

The aged negro talks interesting of General Toombs and many of his aristocratic neighbors.

Forty years ago for the first time in his life "Uncle Jim" left Wilkes county and came to Hancock county where he has resided ever since, following the pursuit of farming, the only avocation he has known during his long life. During his life in Hancock county he has always been known as an industrious and law-abiding citizen.

Despite the boll weevil, "Uncle Jim" says he is assured an average crop of cotton and other crops.

REAL ESTATE ACTIVE AT LAWRENCEVILLE

Lawrenceville, Ga., September 10. (Special.)—Several real estate deals have taken place here in the last few days, among them being the store building formerly owned by A. E. Ewing and occupied by the J. A. Richardson Furniture company, being sold by Ewing to J. J. Baggett and F. Q. Sammon. The store room adjoining this property, occupied by the City Drug company, was sold by L. M. Brand to Dr. A. D. William. The consideration for both pieces of property was said to have been around $10,000.

Roy Johnson, cafe and meat market operator on East Crogan street, purchased the residence on North Perry street now occupied by J. L. Slappey. The consideration was not stated. Mr. Johnson expects to move his family there.

The Powell estate is remodeling the store room now occupied by Pharr & Garner on North Perry street by having a large plate glass put in. This will make one of the finest business houses in Lawrenceville when completed.

DIXIE ROAD IMPROVED SOUTH FROM ALMA

Waycross, Ga., September 10.—(Special.)—Work has been started on the Central Dixie highway from Alma south to the Ware county line.

This work is in two contracts. The Coffee Construction company is placing an eight-inch lime rock base surface treated with asphalt on the first five miles. This will make one of the finest highways in south Georgia.

W. Z. Williams is beginning at the Ware county line and is working towards Alma on about five miles of new location. This will eliminate several dangerous curves and will call for a new bridge. The new bridge will be 500 feet long and will be constructed of treated timbers. The bridge contractor is the Coffee Construction company.

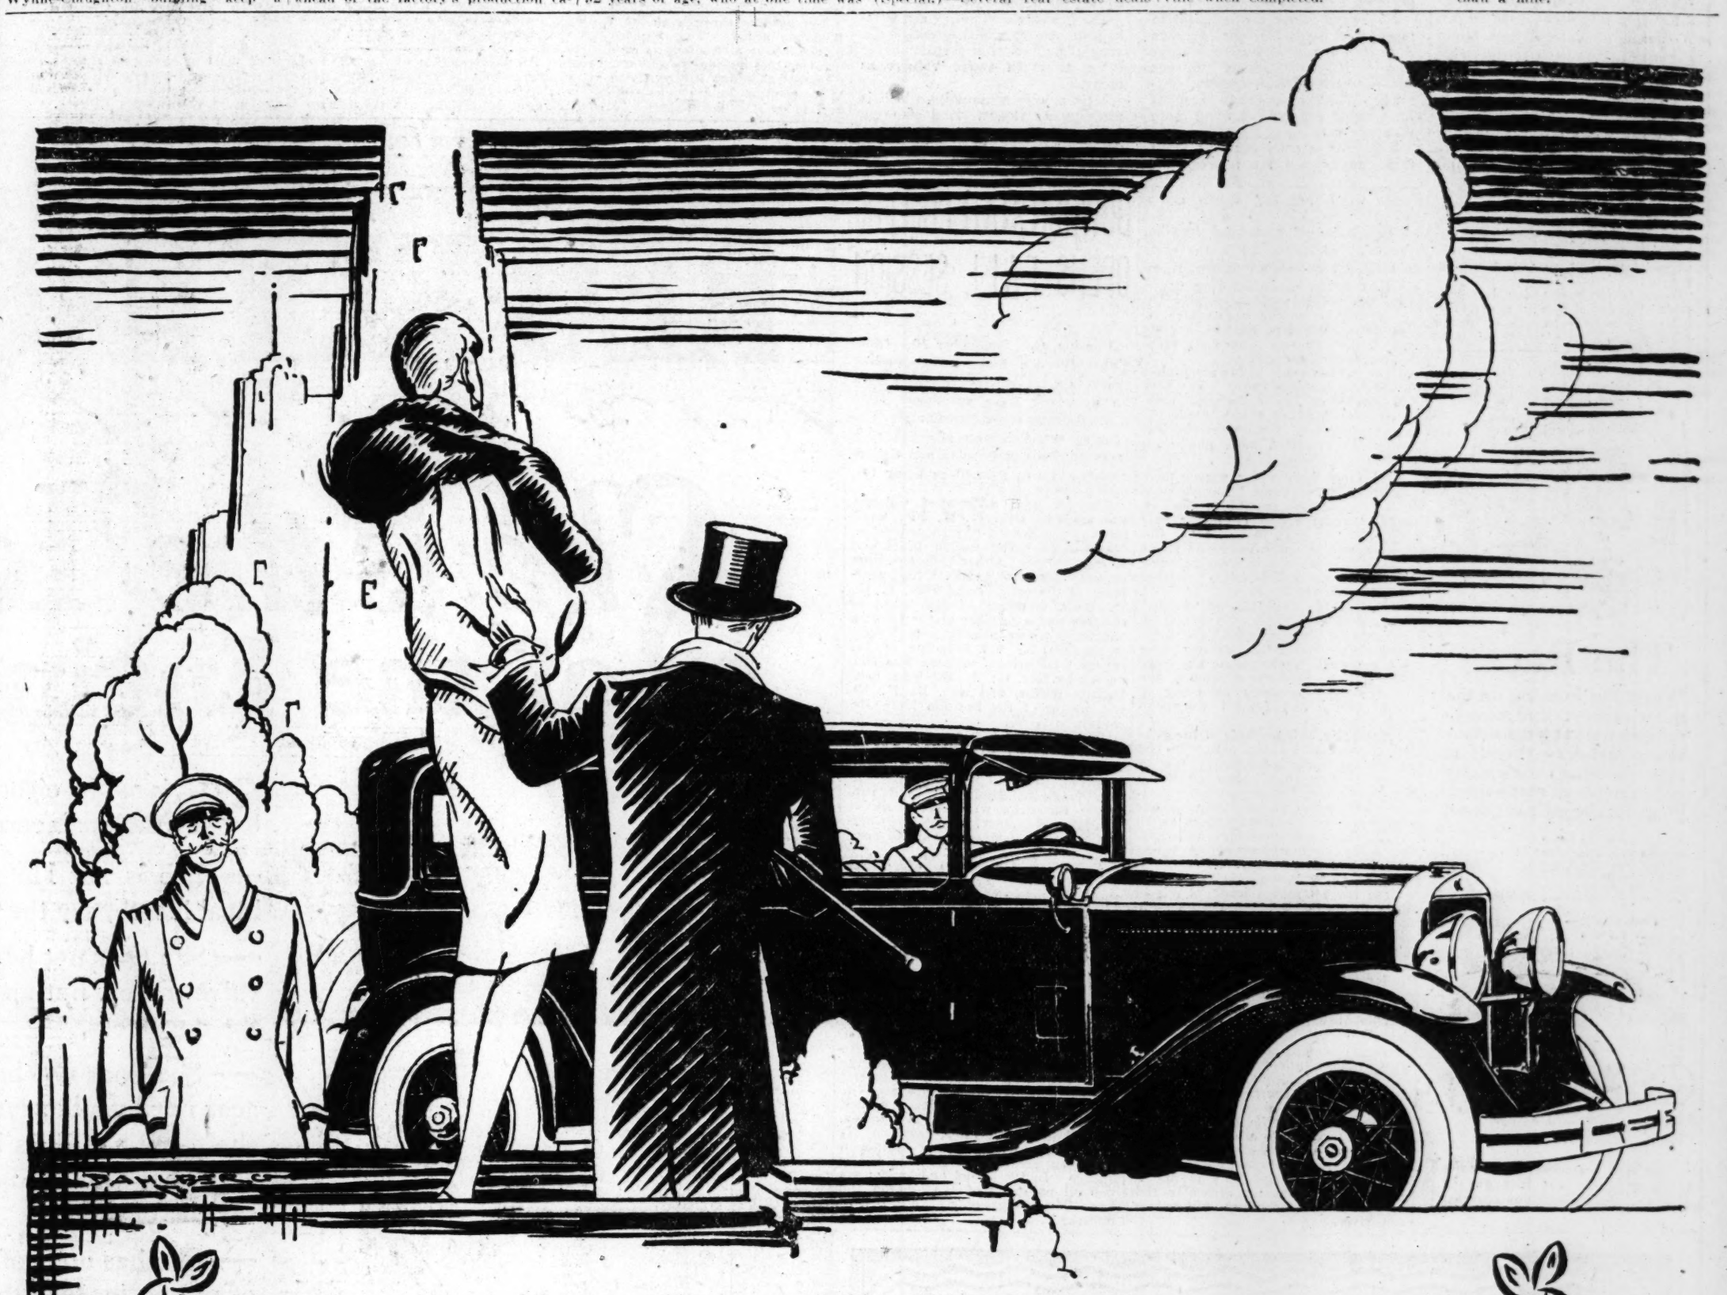

The completion of the five miles of new location will shorten the distance between Waycross and Alma by more than a mile.

THE New Cadillac which is now being shown at the Cadillac-La Salle Style Salon, is the highest expression in motor car design and construction of an organization possessing artistic genius, engineering talent and the experience accumulated in 25 years of fine car manufacture.

This new Cadillac reveals outstanding style, striking beauty and remarkable performance, never before approached.

It is a more beautiful and luxurious car, because rare creative and designing ability have lavishly contributed to its building.

It is superior in performance, because Cadillac has developed and refined through fourteen years of practical use the kind of an engine which experience has proven best suited for fine motor cars—the 90-degree, V-type, eight-cylinder—and has designed a chassis adapted to widest usefulness.

And it is a most completely satisfying car, because the splendid beauty and mechanical excellence of this New Cadillac are enriched by Fisher Custom creations, which are exclusively Cadillac.

Miss McNeel, of Marietta, To Wed George Thomas Of Tupelo, Miss., at St. James Church, October 26

Miss Margaret McNeel, attractive young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan L. McNeel, Sr., of Marietta, whose engagement, announced today to George Thomas, of Tupelo, Miss., is of wide social importance. The wedding will be a brilliant social event taking place Wednesday, October 26, in historic St. James Episcopal church in Marietta, where many members of the lovely bride-elect's family have taken their marriage vows.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Margaret McNeel, of Marietta, and George Thomas, of Tupelo, Miss., is of social importance and interest to Atlanta society, as the charming bride-elect is very popular and well known here. She is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs Morgan L. McNeel, Sr., prominent and influential residents of Georgia and a sister of Mrs. Charles Defoor, Morgan L. McNeel, Jr., Frank McNeel, of Marietta, and Eugene McNeel, of Atlanta.

She was educated at Gunston Hall in Washington, D. C., afterward finishing her education at The Castle, at Tarrytown-on-the-Hudson, and enjoying the cultural advantages of European travel for a year following her graduation.

Miss McNeel, who belongs to one of the most distinguished families in the state, possesses a very charming and attractive manner, and her beauty is of the brunette type. Her marriage to Mr. Thomas takes place in St. James Episcopal church in Marietta, where members of her family have plighted their troth for generations, the ceremony to be a brilliant event of Wednesday evening, October 26.

Mr. Thomas is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Murphy Thomas, aristocratic and foremost citizens of Tupelo, Miss., his father being one of the leading lawyers in the south.

Mr. Thomas graduated from Vanderbilt universtiy, where he belonged to the Phi Delta Theta fraternity. Like his lovely bride-elect, the family of Mr. Thomas has been identified with the upbuilding and early history of Mississippi. He is associated with the Tupelo Garment company, of Tupelo, where he and his bride will reside.

Miss Nelle Stone Weds Mr. Middlebrooks.

Of social interest to a wide circle of friends is the announcement by Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Stone of the marriage of their daughter, Nelle, to Burton Middlebrooks, of Atlanta, Ga., on September 3 at the home of the bride in Sharon, Ga.

Milledgeville Wedding Is of Interest.

Miss Willie Mae Pettigrew, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Pettigrew, became the bride of George Bloodworth, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Bloodworth, Saturday at high noon at the home of the bride's parents in the Brown's Crossing community. Miss Virginia Barnes and Master Louis Barnes, twin children of Mr. and Mrs. Iverson Barnes, held white satin streamers that made an aisle for the bride and groom. Preceding the ceremony Miss Laurie Shurley, who wore a dress of beaded Nile green georgette, played Schubert's serenade and Alfred Bloodworth, brother of the groom, sang "Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms." To the strains of the wedding march from "Lohengrin" the bride and groom entered, preceded by Miss Bernice Davis, of Macon, who wore a blue georgette gown and carried Sunset roses.

The bride was attired in a handsome fall model of golden tan with accessories to match and carried Sweetheart roses interspersed with valley lilies.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. D. Warnock. An informal reception was held after the ceremony. Mrs. Pettigrew, mother of the bride, wore a dress of rose georgette and Mrs. Jane Bloodworth wore black satin crepe. After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Bloodworth left for their home in DeSoto, Mo. Mr. Bloodworth holds a responsible position with the Missouri Pacific railroad. Mrs. Annie P. Jones assisted Mrs. Pettigrew in entertaining at the reception. A number of out-of-town guests were present.

Washington Seminary Opens 50th Year Next Thursday

Washington seminary opens its doors for the 50th year of work Thursday, September 15. That the influence of this well-known institution has been felt during this long period for the uplift of the community is an acknowledged fact. This being its golden anniversary of educational work, the seminary looks back over the years with a feeling of pride to the long list of the names of the best young women of the city who have been its pupils. Gratified that among these are many who have achieved distinction in the literary and business world, very proud of the large number who have become excellent homekeepers and mothers; glad of the loyalty of many who are educating their children at their alma mater.

Beyond question the school is entering upon a most successful year. There has been a steady and heavy enrollment during the summer; the same large and expierienced faculty will be in charge; the few new ones come with fine recommendations from the respective colleges. Of the latter class, perhaps, keenest interest of the girls will center in Miss Sarah Workman, the new director of physical culture. A graduate of Winthrop college, South Carolina, she has won many honors in her chosen field of work. The greatest of these being her selection in 1924 for the Olympic track team. From William and Mary college comes Miss Llewellyn Baker, who will assist Miss Virginia Surtees in the department of domestic arts.

Assisting Miss Scott and Madame Berry in the French and Spanish classes will be Miss Helen Jackson, a graduate of Goucher. She spent last year in a Spanish family in Porto Rico and this summer traveling in France and Spain.

Miss Elizabeth Perry will have the classes in higher mathematics. A niece of the late Miss Belle Martin, a graduate of the seminary and of Goucher, she brings excellent training and youthful enthusiasm to her work.

The initial event of the school year will be the faculty dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Scott Tuesday evening, September 13. Plans for the work of the coming year will be discussed.

For the convenience of the pupils the textbooks will be on sale during the week at the seminary.

Mrs. Frank Jacoway, of Miami, Fla., is the guest of her sister, Mrs. R. C. Henderson at her home on Clairmont avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Haskell Wright, of Newberry, S. C., arrive Tuesday, September 13, to visit Mr. and Mrs. George Wright, on Wilton drive.

Howard and Charles Page have returned to Richmond, Va., after a visit to their mother, Mrs. Susan Page.

Mrs. Brown Hayes entertained her rook club Wednesday afternoon.

Miss Helen Causey returned home last week after spending a month in New York and Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Shields entertained a number of friends at bridge Friday evening at their home at the DeKalb apartments.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Heath and Mrs. Homer George are visiting relatives in Nashville, Tenn.

Mrs. John Goodman was hostess at a bridge party Wednesday afternoon at her home on Candler street in Decatur, in honor of Mrs. Rheborn, of Florida.

Miss de Four Weds Benjamin Teague.

A marirage of interest was that of Miss Frances Caroline de Four to Benjamin Franklin Teague, which was solemnized on Tuesday, September 6, at the home of the bride's mother on Fifth street. Rev. W. L. Duren, pastor of St. Mark's Methodist church, officiated. Only members of the immediate families were present.

The bride is the second daughter of Mrs. Bartow Elkins de Four, and Mrs. E. M. Yowes her sister. She was reared and received her education in Savannah but has lived in Atlanta for the past several years. She is a member of old and well-known families in the south, her grandmother's grandfather having been David Francis Bourquin, major in Count Pulaski's legion during the revolutionary war. Another illustrious kinsman, Peter Tondee, whose father came over with General Oglethorpe, has just been honored by the Colonial Dames by the erection of a tablet at Savannah in recognition of his services in the colonization of Georgia. Her paternal grandmother was Caroline Willingham, of Macon.

Mr. Teague is descended from the Teague and Slaton families, prominent and constructive citizens of Gilmer country. He has varied interests in this and other cities but has retired from active business. After an extended trip through the west Mr. and Mrs. Teague will be at home at 94 Fifth street, N. W., October 25.

Worth-While Club Met at Mrs. Helmer's.

The Worth-While club met at the home of the president, 598 Arthur street, S. W., Thursday afternoon, Mrs. A. G. Helmer presiding.

The club is composed of a group of women who assemble twice monthly to study the constitution of the United States.

The first railroads, being the subject, Mrs. J. D. Evins read a paper on the service of the first railroad. Mrs. Gaston Haskins related that the poets of 100 years ago were not slow in taking the railroads for exercizing the rhyme for John G. Saxe wrote his famous poem, 'Riding on the Rail." Mrs. Josephus Camp gave the statistics of the growth of the railroads. Pictures of locomotives from 1830 to 1927 were shown.

Miss Jo Beth Apperson, is president and acting with her are Gladstone Pursley, first vice president; Katheryn Donehoo, second vice president; Alvin Nissenbaum, third vice president; Mary Salome Betts, fourth vice president; Ervin Morgan, secretary; Lenus Daniel, assistant treasurer, and Willathea Goodman, juvenile president.

The club will hold all meetings, orchestra and chorus practices at Rich Brothers store in the "school room" on the fourth floor, which will be reached by a special elevator. The membership dues have been increased to $1.50. This entitles each member to the 16 Saturday afternoon programs, the privilege of playing some instrument in the orchestra, singing in the chorus, use of the Music club library and one seat in block of seats set aside for the Barrere Little Symphony orchestra, at the auditorium-armory May 11. There will be an opportunity offered to play on the monthly club programs, the special radio concerts and to take part in the national music week observance. There will also be a chance for each member to become actively engaged in some special department of the club, simply by stating to the club director, Mrs. G. Bingham Bache, what one wishes to do.

Saturday, October 1, will be "registration day." There will also be an orchestra rehearsal and musical games. The hours for this day will be from 12 to 2:30. On the following Saturday the club will give a "little luncheon" in the banquet hall at the Atlanta Woman's club. Programs throughout the year will be given on the plan of the juniors on the third Saturdays and the juveniles on the first Saturdays of each month. Mrs. G. Bingham Bache, fourth vice president of the Music club and director of the junior department, announces the following chairmen: Gladstone Pursley, junior programs; Katheryn Donehoo, juvenile programs; Alvin Nissenbaum, membership; Martha Brady, chorus; Ervin Morgan, orchestra; Wilber Kurtz, radio; Bertye Kate Smith, national music week; Elizabeth Norris, sacred music; May Bullard, public school music; Elizabeth Sheldon, junior pageantry; Eugenia Snow, juvenile pageantry; Jane Tway, contests; Louise Moore, prizes; Jacqulin Moore, constitution, by-laws and rules; Roberta Crew, resolutions; Helen Kaplin, exchange programs; Emily Harrell, current events; Clifford Marvyn Stodghill, original composition; Mary Salome Betts and Margaret Stokey, hostesses; Virginia Morris, guest book; Elizabeth Morgan, scrap book; Imaal Patterson, publicity exploitation; Herbert Clark, James Carpenter and George Buckley, ushers; Gladstone Pursley and Katheryn Donehoo, timekeepers; Francis Mitchell, past presidents' assembly.

The senior members taking part are William Chase, director of orchestra and instruments; Helen Knox Spain, chorus and voices; Mrs. Pierpont Spiker, director of piano department; Mrs. William Butt Griffith, harp department; Mrs. W. F. Barton, treasurer and Mrs. M. E. Patterson, chairman of publicity.

Mrs. Wilmer L. Moore, president of the Music club, has appointed Mrs. Rucker McCarty, chairman of the board of visitors. Mrs. Bache, the director, may be reached by telephone Hemlock 4236, for registration details.

Kirkwood League Holds Meeting.

Kirkwood Civic league met recently at the home of the president, Mrs. A. I. Branham, on Howard street. The treasurer's report showed a substantial balance, with all indebtedness paid to date. Constructive plans were made for the coming year's activities. The executive board was made the committee on ways and means.

The first remunerative activity will be a rummage sale, Saturday, September 17. The following committee was appointed to select a location and collect rummage: Mrs. P. H. Bell and Miss Nellie Emery, chairmen; Mrs. J. W. Templeman, Mrs. W. E. Sanders, the four section vice presidents and Mrs. J. L. Murphy. It was voted to have the annual bazar in December. A unique style show will be arranged in the near future. Mrs. Branhan urged the league members to register and vote.

Mrs. H. S. Parks brought to the attention of the league the importance of good movies for children.

Mrs. Parks appealed to the mothers to send their children to the Saturday morning matinees at the Howard.

The next meeting will be held October 4, in the school auditorium.

Atlanta Chapter, U. D. C., To Meet Tuesday.

The Atlanta chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, will begin the fall activities Tuesday, September 13, with a board luncheon, which will be open to the chapter. The executive board will meet at 10:30 o'clock, with Mrs. Frank Mason, chairman, presiding.

At 1 o'clock luncheon will be served in the dining room of the chapter house. Mrs. Stafford Seidell, president of the chapter, will preside. This luncheon will in a measure be in the nature of an educational meeting, and many prominent guests have been invited to attend. Judge Alex Stephens and Dr. and Mrs. Robert Stephens, Mrs. John Holden, of Athens, Mrs. Clint Moore, of Crawfordville, will be among the guests. Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Holden will speak of the Alexander Stephens school at Thomasville and the great work that is being accomplished there.

Mrs. K. S. Anderson, of Madison, state chairman of education, and Mrs. Fay Gaffney, of Columbus, Ga., will also tell of the educational work throughout the state in the school and with scholarships. Mrs. Gaffney is state chairman of scholarships and a vast amount of good is done through this committee, also in the Atlanta chapter under the chairmanship of Mrs. M. O. Nix.

Other prominent guests invited are Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, president of the Atlanta Woman's club; Mrs. A. J. Smith, regent of the Atlanta chapter, D. A. R., and Mrs. Irving Thomas, regent of the Joseph Habersham chapter, D. A. R.

The committee on arrangements for the luncheon are Mrs. L. A. Clement, Mrs. M. O. Nix, Mrs. L. G. Holsenbeck.

Atlanta Woman's Club To Open Fall Season at Meeting Monday

Miss Margaret Battle, soprano soloist at the North Avenue Presbyterian church, and prominent voice teacher associated with Miss Helen Battle, who will accompany her in a group of songs at the first fall meeting of the Atlanta Woman's club Monday, September 12.

The first meeting for the fall season of the Atlanta Woman's club will be held Monday afternoon, September 12, at 3 o'clock in the club auditorium, with Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, president, in the chair.

The chairman of each department of the club organization will be present and respond, when called upon, with an outline of the work to be accomplished under her direction during the coming year.

The musical program, under Mrs. Charles Chalmers, chairman of the club's music, will present Miss Margaret Battle in a group of songs, Miss Helen Battle and Mrs. Frances Stovall Felder in solo piano numbers and Henry Pomar on the violin.

As is always the case in progressive, growing organizations, time has brought the necessity of making some important alterations in the by-laws of this growing, up-to-the-minute club and on Monday afternoon, Mrs. Howard McCall, chairman of the revision committee, assisted by Mrs. Charles Haden, Mrs. DeLos Hill, Mrs. John K. Ottley and Mrs. Bolling Jones, will present the following amendments to the by-laws of the club as they now stand:

1. To amend Article IV, Section I to read:

Any woman over 18 years of age shall be eligible for membership in this club. Membership shall be active, associate, non-resident, honorary and life. The total membership in this club must not exceed 1,000 in number.

2. To amend Article IV, Section 5:

To substitute the words 100 for 70. (The total number of life memberships to be issued by this club must not exceed 100 in number).

3. To amend Article VII, Section I to read as follows:

The regular meeting of the club shall be held on the second Monday of each month from September to May inclusive.

4. To amend Article VII, Section 2 to read:

The newly-elected officers shall assume office at this meeting.

From the earliest days of the existence of this club, each president has undertaken to leave some noteworthy accomplishment marking her regime, as an heritage to the generations to come. Probably the most outstanding accomplishment along educational lines that has ever marked any one term of office has been done by the present resourceful president, Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith and her capable chairman of education, Mrs. Tom Brooks.

At the club house on Peachtree street there has just been installed a course of study to be known as the Oglethorpe university extension course. Mrs. Brooks announces that these classes will begin the first week in October. College accredited courses are being offered under the joint arrangement of the Atlanta Woman's club and Oglethorpe university to any one wishing to qualify formally for further study to an A. B. or B. M. degree. The courses outlined are English and Journalism, by Dr. James Routh; short story, Dr. W. F. Melton; psychology, Dr. H. J. Gaertner; sociology, Dr. Mark Borrows; French, Italian and Spanish, Professor W. L. Rooney, and German, Dr. H. J. Gaertner. Other subjects will be given on application of a sufficient number.

To those not caring to go into the intensive work of the classes offered through the Oglethorpe university extension courses, there will be classes in conversational French by Mlle. Groleau and Italian by Mrs. Enrico Leide. An unique innovation will be a class in fencing by Professor Rooney for those interested in reducing. Information as to registrars for classes, prices and hours will be announced through the daily press at a later date.

Monday afternoon the treasurer, Mrs. John S. Brogdon, and the assistant treasurer, Mrs. E. B. Havis, will be at the door to collect dues for the fiscal year.

After the business of the meeting is dispatched there will be a social hour with Mrs. M. L. Thrower, chairman, and Mrs. George Brower, vice-chairman of hospitality, in charge. Assisting these ladies will be the hospitality committee who are: Mrs. W. O. Foote, Mrs. John Owens, Mrs. Frank Mason, Mrs. James Austin, Mrs. Winn McGuinn, Miss Dorothy Banks, Mrs. J. H. Nicholson, Mrs. Feilding Gordon, Mrs. DeLos H. Hill, Mrs. Russell Bridges, Mrs. Hinton Clarke, Mrs. E. V. Carter, Mrs. Carey Morgan and Mrs. W. L. Percy.

Garden Committee Studies Rock Gardens.

The garden committee of the Atlanta Woman's club met Thursday in the grounds of the Lakewood nurseries. W. H. Eggett, landscape artist at the nurseries, gave a lecture on "Rock Gardens." "Dwarf herbaceous plants are best for the rock garden," Mr. Eggett said. "The Alpine plants are rather hard to raise here." Grouped around the lovely pool Mr. Eggett had made, he explained to the members the making of a pool and the growing of water lilies.

The garden committee meets the second and fourth Thursday in the month. All members of the Woman's club interested in gardening are welcome members of the garden committee upon application for membership and the payment of small yearly dues.

Kle Club To Have Spend-the-Day Party.

The spend-the-day party of the Kle club for September will be held Wednesday, September 14, at the home of Mrs. E. O. Tallman, 830 Techwood drive. The business session will be presided over by Mrs. G. E. Cooper, president, at 11 o'clock. It is the desire of the club to adopt activities of a constructive character, and at this meeting final plans for fall and mid-winter activities will be outlined. Mrs. Tallman will be assisted in receiving and entertaining by Mrs. William Hines. All members are invited to attend.

Tea To Commemorate 140th Anniversary Of U.S. Constitution

In commemoration of the 140th anniversary of the issuance of the constitution of the United States of America from the peerless convention that framed it at Philadelphia, the Friday afternoon tea, September 16, at the Atlanta Woman's club will be a marked occasion, bringing together many patriotic citizens.

The tea will be sponsored by the citizenship department, Mrs. Charles Goodman, chairman, and members, Mrs. L. G. Hardman, Mrs. R. L. Turman, Mrs. J. D. Evans, assisted by the president, Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, past presidents and officers of the club.

All members of the club are invited to be present and to make reservations as early as possible by phoning Mrs. T. E. Simmons, Hemlock 0225, and Mrs. Joseph Smith, Hemlock 5803.

Art Committee Makes Plans.

The art committee of the Atlanta Woman's club will hold, throughout the season, a series of round table gatherings for the enjoyment and discussion of American painting and sculpture.

These meetings will be held with the idea of becoming more familiar not only with the work of the master painters and sculptors of America but with all important art movements of recent years, their especial influence on the work of American artists, and with whatever is new and distinctive in national art.

Besides these regular monthly meetings, preparations are under way for a series of interesting lectures and exhibitions. An effort will also be made to foster creative art work among the members by arranging special days for work and criticism. All members of the club interested in any of these subjects are requested to communicate with the art committee. The chairman for this committee for the coming year is Mrs. Fred Bull

Club Girls Are Entertained.

The Atlanta Woman's club was hostess Wednesday to the 4-H Club Girls of Fulton County when they were entertained with a swimming party followed by tea in the palm room.

The swimming party for the 4-H girls is an annual affair instituted last year when the girls returned from a week's stay at Camp Wilkins. The Georgia Federation has always been most active in assisting with the extension work of the home demonstration agents of the State College of Agriculture, the U. S. department of agriculture cooperating, and the Atlanta Woman's club has worked with Miss Lucy Wood, home demonstration agent for Fulton county, in her classes for the girls and women. This year the club gave a scholarship to Camp Wilkins to one of the girls.

Miss Wood and 25 of the club girls were present Wednesday. Assisting Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, president of the Atlanta Woman's club, were Mrs. Arthur Hazzard, chairman of pool, and Mrs. Ira E. Farmer, chairman of county cooperation for the club.

Hotel Candler Opens Formally At Reception Monday Evening

The Hotel Candler, Decatur's beautifully appointed new hotel, will swing wide its doors to receive the citizens of Decatur and Atlanta Monday evening, on the occasion of its formal opening. The event, which is to prove one of the high lights of the new fall season, will also assemble distinguished visitors from other parts of the state.

The reception begins at 7 and lasts until 9 o'clock, after which the guests will be invited to the huge ballroom on the second floor, where dancing will be held from 9 o'clock until midnight. The receiving line, headed by Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Sloan, and including citizens of Decatur and the managers of prominent Atlanta hotels, will be formed in the lobby lounge of the first floor. This large and handsomely furnished room will be lavishly decorated with potted plants, cut flowers and set pieces.

During the course of the reception, music will be furnished by Mildred Baker Fletcher, gifted singer of Orlando, Fla., who is a neice of Mr. and Mrs. Sloan, and by a concert orchestra under the direction of Enrico Leide. Mrs. Fletcher will be accompanied at the piano by Mrs. S. R. Christie, of Decatur.

After passing the receiving line, guests will move on a tour of inspection to others parts of the building, under the charming guidance of a group of young Decatur sub-debs. All floors of the hotel will be open and the striking furnishings of both public and guest rooms will be presented for the admiration of the visitors. Refreshments will be served in the main dining room.

At 9 o'clock dancing will begin in the large ballroom on the second floor, music being furnished by the Leide orchestra, and will continue until midnight.

Assisting Mr. and Mrs. Sloan in receiving will be Mr. and Mrs. Walter Candler, Mr. and Mrs. J. Howell Green, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. The proceeds will be devoted to charity.

Mrs. Woodhouse and T. K. Glenn Wed at Ceremony in New York

The wedding of Mrs. Elizabeth Ewing Woodhouse, of New York, and Thomas Kearney Glenn, of Atlanta, took place in New York city Saturday afternoon, September 10, at the Hotel Biltmore in the presence of a distinguished gathering of prominent residents of Atlanta, Detroit and New York city.

The ceremony was performed by Dr. R. L. Foreman in the imposing Biltmore chapel, which, with its broad, impressive arches, stone work and subdued lighting heightened the cathedral effect of the whole.

The bridal party entered from private elevators and proceeded down the vaulted room along the pathway outlined with ribbons and aisle posts covered with masses of pink roses, to a bower of Easter lilies, within which was erected a floral altar of palms and lilies.

The beautiful bride wore a Louise-boulanger model in gray chiffon and lace, a black velvet hat with a large diamond buckle and wore a bouquet of orchids.

Following the wedding buffet refreshments were served in the music room, the bridal table being decorated with pink and white roses, while vases containing great sprays of the same tints ornamented the buffet tables. The room was bisected by banks of palms, a floral portal leading from the tables to the dance floor.

Mrs. Glenn was one of the noted belles and beauties of the middle west, and was equally noted intellectually, having achieved fame as a writer for children, her "Miss Billie Stories" being especially well known.

Mr. Glenn is prominent in financial and social circles in Atlanta, and is president of the Atlanta and Lowry National Bank and Trust company.

Among the Atlantans present at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Howard Candler, Mrs. Charles Moody, Mr. and Mrs. John Glenn, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Wardlaw, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Glenn, Wilbur and Wadley Glenn, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. James J. Goodrum, Mr. and Mrs. Warner Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Maddox, Mr. and Mrs. John K. Ottley, Miss Mary Goodrum, Mrs. Stacy Ernest Hill, Edward H. Inman, John H. Goddard and William E. Chapin.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn will make their home on Myrtle street after a wedding journey in the east.

Miss Adams Weds Thomas W. Steed In Royston, Ga.

Royston, Ga., September 10.—Miss Winnie Mae Adams, second daughter of Colonel and Mrs. George A. Adams, and Thomas W. Steed, of Richlands, N. C., were united in marriage at a beautiful ceremony at the Royston Baptist church on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Arthur Jackson, pastor of the First Baptist church, of Hendersonville, N. C.

The candles were lighted by Mrs. Alton Hollis at the beginning of the ceremony. Charlie Berryman and Garnett Langford were groomsmen. The bridesmaids were Miss Tilda McConnell and Miss Orpah Steed, sister of the groom, and Miss Louise Tucker was maid of honor.

The attractive bride entered with her father, Colonel George A. Adams, and were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Dr. Steed, his brother.

Mr. and Mrs. Steed left in their car for Atlanta, and other points of interest in Georgia. After two weeks they will be at home to their friends at Richlands, N. C., where Mr. Steed is cashier of the Bank of Richlands.

Candler-Brandon Wedding Plans Are of Interest

Cordial interest centers in the announcement of the wedding plans of Miss Elizabeth Louise Brandon, of Richmond, Va., and John Howard Candler, which will be selomnized at 8 o'clock, October 12, in Holy Comforter church, Richmond, Va.

Miss Florence Hossecker, of Richmond, a cousin of the bride-elect, will be her maid of honor, and Miss Mary Peyton Grymes, of Richmond, and Miss Hariet Page, of New York city, will be the bridesmaids. Little Randal LeSueur, of St. Petersburg, Fla., will act as flower girl.

Mr. Candler will have as his best man his cousin, Howard Candler, of Atlanta. Newton Miller and Guy A. Dunlop, Jr., of Richmond, Va.; John Hurt and Edgar Chambers, of Atlanta, will be the groomsmen.

A reception for the bridal party and out-of-town guests will be held at the Jefferson hotel following the ceremony.

Mothers' Union Works For Atlanta Childs' Home.

The Mothers' Department Union of Atlanta entertained at tea Wednesday at the home of Mrs. S. R. Wilson. The object of the tea was to bring the teachers and presidents of the mothers' or matrons' classes from all the churches in the city together. This is the only organization in the city where the mothers of all denominations come together for the advancement of Christian religion.

Among those present at the tea were: Mesdames. J. C. Glore, S. R. Wilson, R. B. Stewart, H. T. Foddrill, Leo Suddeth, F. B. Knapp, J. B. Morgan, J. W. Wood, W. J. Clark, J. P. Hill, E. R. Ware, O. T. Camp, W. P. Banks, Mary Banks, R. Willis and O. R. Freeman.

The mothers' department union meets at First Baptist church in Decatur Tuesday, September 20 at 10 o'clock. The meeting will be devoted to the Atlanta Childs' Home, the only organization that is sponsored by this body. The following speakers are on the program: Mesdames J. C. Glore, of St. Pauls M. E. church; Nora Lanford, of Woodward Avenue Baptist church; Floyd Fields, of Decatur, and E. Langhorn, social workers. All will speak on different phases of the Atlanta Childs' Home.

AVALON!

'Twas Monte Cristo, we are told,
Who, in his search for wealth and fame,
Found sparkling gems and yellow gold,
Which blazoned history with his name.

But just today there has been found
(In the land of Muse, not far away),
A new footwear cache where style abounds—
The Treasure Trove of AVALON!

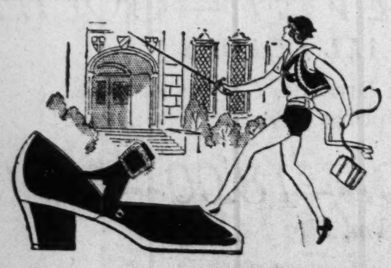

The winsome smiling "pirates"—(Atlanta has thousands in bobs)—will find this coy walking oxford (at $9.50—Muse's Avalon price). It's a tan Russia tie with smart lizard tongue.

Muse's—AVALON!

And look how good-looking is this one! For street, and for sport—with front strap and buckeled to the side—here is chic! In alligator. $9.50.

For smart school days—this one—in bright, black patent leather, with a sparkling buckle of rhinestone. $9.50.

This one—for dress—and for street—gives to "Miss Pirate" a style she adores—with heel as here, or heel that's low—in black patent leather—$9.50, no more!

And you'll find this black satin in the Avalon-trove—black satin vamp, with cubist-moire back. For smart afternoon and Autumn evening. (All of Muse's Avalons are $9.50 always—and first shown tomorrow—Don't miss being here.)

PEACHTREE - WALTON - BROAD

JUST when society was puzzling over the lack of September brides usually counted upon to enliven the harvest month, Miss Helen Douglas planned her wedding to Guy Mark Mankin for Sunday afternoon at the Unitarian-Universalist church, the date marking her own and the birthday of her fiance. A departure from the ordinary in the arrangements of this very important social event is the substitution of the musical gem, Amaryllis, from Circe, the operatic ballet spectacle, played as a processional for the bridal party, instead of the ever-accepted march from Lohengrin. In addition to its quaint, familiar melody, there's another reason why this lovely bride of today chose Amaryllis to distinguish her wedding music. It links with this day of days another occasion when she was the cynosure of all eyes and the center of sincere admiration—the day on which she, in all her radiant, blonde loveliness, was crowned queen of the May at Rockford college just prior to her graduation from this Illinois institution. The lilting, festive air of the melody, written especially for that romantic figure, Louis XIII, marked the entrance of the stately queen and her court, just as it will today herald the approach of the ravishing bride.

Mrs. William Randolph Smith and Mrs. William Rose will be their sister's matrons of honor, preceding her down the flower-bedecked aisle through which she passes with her mother, Mrs. Hamilton Douglas, who gives her daughter in marriage to the debonnaire Virginian, whose family for five generations has resided in Fairfax county, known far and wide as one of the oldest and most aristocratic sections of the Old Dominion and lying close beside the banks of the Potomac river.

Acting as the maid of honor is 16-year-old Miss Nancy Downing, the bride-elect's godchild, a rare devotion having existed between them ever since the christening of this charming young girl. Following the custom of all the brides in the Douglas family, today's fair bride will carry the real lace handkerchief, the priceless possession of her great-great-grandmother, who carried it at her wedding over one hundred years ago.

White satin ribbons will mark the reserved space allotted for the Atlanta Woman's Overseas club assembling en masse to witness the former national president plight her troth.

Miss Douglas served for 13 months overseas in the world war as an ambulance driver and mechanic, being attached to the French army, her war record being such as to receive recognition from France in the presentation of the Medaille de la Reconnaisance, as well as being made a citizen of Lizancy, well-known French town situated on the Marne.

A GIFT generally affords an expression for sentiment. This is especially true if the occasion is a golden wedding anniversary. Last Monday Dr. and Mrs. Franklin Pierce Akers celebrated their fiftieth anniversary at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Akers on The Prado. As the last flower added its glow to one of the most artistic celebrations of the season, a shower of presents, in orange and yellow and gold, bore evidence of the esteem which is generally felt for this beloved Atlanta couple.

The unique feature of the occasion was a gold cloth rose in a setting of real green leaves and fitting gold pot, the petals of which held gold pieces within the brilliant folds. The rose was the gift of Mr. and Mrs. William Akers.

Among the wealth of gold, china and glassware, silver-gold plated flower bowl with candlesticks and the numerous other gifts which so appropriately expressed the spirit of the occasion, was a bowl and gold fish, a door knocker in the form of a wedding bell, and an attractive gold traveling clock.

The color scheme of gold was carried out in every detail, even to the dainty guest book presenting a miniature bridal couple, and tied with golden satin ribbon on a white moire cover.

Little Ida Akers, granddaughter of Dr. and Mrs. Akers whose birthday falls on the wedding anniversary of her grandparents, celebrated this strange coincidence with a luncheon for a number of her little friends the day following.

Dr. and Mrs. Akers had with them on this eventful and brilliant occasion their five children, Albert Akers, of Albany, Dillon Akers, Frank Akers, William Akers and Mrs. William Percy.

BEGINNING Monday an exclusive Peachtree street shop, which caters to the sartorial whims and fancies of the feminine world, will be glorified by the presence, within its softly tinted walls, of one of society's most prominent young matrons, who will be there in the role, not of a patron as you have formerly glimpsed her, but as an added asset to the sales force of the successful couturier.

The name as emblazoned on the plate glass front of the shop is "Weinberger's" and the popular young matron is no other than Mrs. George Weyman, whom society welcomed into the fold of debutantes three short winters ago as Miss Mary Ann Lipscomb. It goes without saying that sumptuous satins and velvets developed into the latest of fall modes will take on added charm when displayed by the dainty hands of this attractive young person.

And to say she's thrilled is putting it mildly! It makes one feel so independent she claims, and then she's of that temperament that grows tired of having nothing to do—like so many of those efficient young housekeepers of the present day who rule a well-ordered household in less time that it takes to tell about it.

SHIRLEY Powers Davis, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Davis made a gay little traveler on the long motor trip to North Carolina with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Drury Powers, and breasted the waves like a veteran at Wrightsville Beach. On her maternal side, Shirley comes from a long line of Baptists. She attended the Presbyterian Sunday school at Flat Rock last Sunday and the first question asked the little girl was:

"Who made you?"

"God," she replied.

"What did He make you of?"

To which Shirley reverently replied: "Out of sugar and spice and everything nice."

A CERTAIN widow and widower, somewhat past their salad days, family circle, are engaging in a very sentimental flirtation which bids fair to end in a trip to the altar. They attend the same church, being of the same Protestant faith, and through channels of propinquity their friendship has ripened into something akin to love. The lady went on a trip quite recently which extended over several weeks' duration, and her interest in the widower was evidenced by the many letters written to the aforementioned gentleman.

Sunday was the official day set apart for her return to Atlanta. The elder daughter of the widower, cognizant of the existing love affair, found a postcard in the pockets of the coat of a suit of clothes she sent to the cleaner which read thusly:

"Will be at church Sunday morning and am so anxious to see you. If you move forward a pew, I'll move back a pew, and then we'll be together."

RETURNING last week from a three months' European trip, Miss Mary Manning related many interesting stories about her contact with interesting personages. In Dublin she met Mayor Walker and Mrs. Walker, of New York, the genial mayor exclaiming after the introduction, "So you are from Atlanta! Well, that is my second home. For it is the New York of the south." During their few minutes' chat Mayor Walker told Miss Manning that he expected to visit Bobby Jones in Atlanta next winter.

Among the many interesting social functions attended by Miss Manning was the dance given at Moore Abbey, the summer home of the famous John McCormick, the occasion honoring New York's mayor. The great Irish tenor asked Miss Manning for the first dance and told her that he hoped to see her in Atlanta next February. Miss Manning also met Mrs. McCormick and the talented son and daughter of the golden-voiced singer.

MRS. JOSEPH K. OHL, the former Maude Annulet Andrews, of Washington, Wilkes county, Georgia, resided in Pekin during the period that her husband, the late J. K. Ohl, was Asiatic correspondent for the New York Herald. She is, therefore, well versed and familiar with the life and conditions in Asia and has contributed the fifth article in a series to Asia, a well-known magazine, captioned "Silken Servitors in Pekin."

The story has a love theme woven uniquely through its pages existing between the servants in the British legation, which is excellently handled by the author, depicting the almost undreamed and unheard of subject, a Chinese woman untrue to her husband, and the loss of force in a man who has an affair with a married woman. She brings forth in the conclusion of the article the founding of the Dean Lung chair at Columbia university by an American in memory of his Chinese servant, the only chair of learning in the world founded in the name of a servant who embodied all of the best traits of the Chinese.

From generation to generation, therefore, students at Columbia will have reason to hold in grateful memory Dean Lung, a silken servitor of China.

Mrs. Ohl attains in these sketches a natural understanding and impression of what she saw and experienced, never for a moment making an attempt at pose, high-brow knowledge or philosophy about the orient. Her word picture is humanly interesting and cleverly drawn.

ATLANTA'S love of flowers is evidenced by its fostering groups, organized bodies and individuals who here and there are contributing to the nature and development of garden blossoms and shrubs. Further indication of this love of flowers was seen Thursday as W. H. Eggett, landscape artist of the Lakewood nurseries, amidst an assemblage of members, of the garden committee of the Atlanta Woman's club fashioned a miniature pool and flower bed at Lakewood, explaining with that ease of the true artist the origin, growth and possibilities of "The Rock Garden."

For those who love beauty in all of its forms nothing holds the appeal of this rock garden, that form of ornamental planting in rocky places congenial to favorable conditions for the growth of certain plants. Its very primitiveness adds to its natural charm, according to the explanations which Mr. Eggett made in his interesting talk. Every broken surface or bold crag will be covered in time with a healing lichen or featherly fern. In almost every pocket in nature's rough places this sealing with plants takes place, often obtaining variety and a degree of brilliancy.

Atlantans, however eager, may not obtain that ideal location for the rock bed, that spot between the limit of tree growth and the land of perpetual snow, but those who have the patience and the natural inclination may find in their own back yards a great degree of that charm which can only be found in matchless combination of ferns, flowers and shrubs nestling in primitive rock beds. "Dwarf herbaceous plants are best for the rock garden," said Mr. Eggett as he explained to this interested group of Atlanta women those things which he has learned through years of experimentation and study. The Alpine plants are rather difficult to raise here. He drew nearer to the pool, explaining its formation and the growth of water lilies.

"Find the sight of your garden," he continued, "and then place the pool so as to afford a long view of the water. Always consider the drainage. Do not fertilize water lilies too heavly with bone meal; it tends to make larger leaves and fewer blooms." Mr. Eggett displayed his shrubs and flowers to the interest of those gathered there about the improvised pool, their rare shades affording evidence of the value of care in selection and culture. The Paul Moch and the Frank Trelease were the most admired of the lilies.

Miss Florence Yancey Hewlett's Engagement Announced to Geoffrey Rish Dendy Today

Miss Florence Yancey Hewlett, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel D. Hewlett, whose engagement is announced to Geoffrey Rish Dendy, the marriage to be solemnized in the fall.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Florence Yancey Hewlett and Geoffrey Rish Dendy, formerly of Houston, Miss., but a resident of Atlanta for the past four years, is of cordial interest to a large circle of relatives and friends in Georgia and Mississippi, as the charming bride-elect and her fiancee have distinguished southern ancestry.

Miss Hewlett, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dunbar Hewlett, is an unusually pretty young girl of the Irish type of beauty. She has expressive blue eyes, fringed with long black lashes and her wavy, dark brown hair is bobbed and worn having married children in their in a fashionable cut. She went to school at Washington seminary before entering Hollins college at Hollins, Va., where she finished her education. She is a profound student, and developed this remarkable characteristic at a very early age. Although Miss Hewlett has never made her debut, she has been exceedingly popular in the college set of society and in Rome, where her maternal grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Yancey, are prominent and beloved citizens, the attractive bride-elect being the namesake of Mrs. Yancey. Her mother was Miss Sarah Yancey, of Rome, before her marriage, and was numbered among the belles in Georgia society during her young ladyhood. Misses Sarah, Amelia and Claire Hewlett are her sisters, and the late Mr. and Mrs. William Hewlett, of Savannah, were her paternal grandparents.

Mr. Dendy belongs to an honored and well-known Dutch family which was among the early settlers of Mississippi and contributed to the upbuilding and history of the state. He was graduated from the Coyne Engineering school in Chicago, Ill., and is associated in business with the National Carbon company.

Mr. Dendy and his bride-elect will make their home in Atlanta after their marriage in the fall.

Mr. and Mrs. Griffin Give Week-End Party.

Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Griffin entertained a number of their close friends at Camp Deljon, Cane Creek Falls, Dahlonega, Ga., last week-end. Those who enjoyed Mr. and Mrs. Griffin's hospitality were Miss Nell Long, Miss Frances Griffin, Miss Emily Long, Miss Adabelle Morrow, Miss Virginia Hardwicke, Robert Morrow, Clifford Griffin, Frank Landreth, Kelly Morrow and "Boots" Bell.

Mrs. Catherine Calhoun, mother of the hostess, shared chaperon honors.

Miss Pauline Swann Weds Mr. Blanton.

Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Swann announce the marriage of their daughter, Phoebe Pauline, to Milton Wetmore Blanton, of Sikeston, Mo., Sunday, September 4, in Anderson, S. C., where the bride was visiting Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick and Mrs. Kirkpatrick, the former officiating at the ceremony. Mrs. Blanton was graduated from Girls' high and Atlanta Normal schools, and teaches the fourth grade in Whiteford Avenue public school. Mr. Blanton is a senior at Georgia Tech and is president of the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity.

Mr. and Mrs. Blanton will make their home with the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Swann, 1442 Copeland avenue, in West End.

Mrs. Greene Contributes U. D. C. Reflections on Official Page

Mrs. L. W. Greene, of Sycamore, who has acted as publicity chairman during the absence of the editor of the U. D. C. official page in The Constitution, Mrs. J. J. Harris, of Sandersville, has contributed the following reflections on a summer's work and pleasures to the columns:

"In an effort to rearrange our varying moods resulting from a series of many pleasures, the particular gift of an indulgent summer, the readjusting of ideals and the shaking out the crinkles that have formed in our usual way of living, we make September the calendar waste basket, in which we surrender so many of our summer ways of doing, that seem now so unorthodox in the light of a busy fall.

"Cheerfully, one moment we groom our errant spirits, but the actual settling down is rather a difficult feat at times, our expectations having been on edge so long. And from the thrilling altitudes some have known to but the following of a mountain pass or a quiet vacationing where the soul slips away on the croon o' the sea, we have flattered our fancies. But September finds most of us home again and with flexible appreciation, counting its comforts our rarest blessings, and at times wondering how in sanity of mind one was ever induced to follow so irrevelent a fashion of overworking so absurdly seeking a good time when home is so nice.

"And at the expense of absence we would most surely miss the September—the first fall meeting of our beloved U. D. C.—for one has always observed that next to the actual home-coming the greeting of friends at chapter meetings is most freighted with happiness. The chapter houses are showing cheerful signs of habitation and many is the hostess throughout the state joyous with plans for her first assembly of guests.

"But to supercede all the joys of summer with a bound is to suggest Covington—the convention—and so close upon the heels of September and your summer trip hardly digested.

"Mrs. Trox Bankston sends an article descriptive of Covington of the sixties. This most interesting sketch was prepared by Mrs. William C. Clarke. And it is most fitting that it be submitted before the convention, for once having known the delights of her hospitality one could never, by possible chance, conjure up one single irritating thought of this charming old place. And it would be considered unbecoming in guests to refuse to believe that anything unlovely had ever touched her warm-hearted threshold, when Mrs. Clarke and Mrs. Bankston vouched for this as verified history.

"There is a certain endearing quality about the president of this to-be-hostess chapter that has caused her to be remembered by us with pleasant intimacy, and causes us without undue familiarity to refer to her as 'our friend.' It is her adaptable, kind way of accepting the U. D. C. insignia as a symbol that all true Daughters are 'colonel's ladies' and should there happen to be any Judy O'Gradys she would consider them also with gracious courtesy, and this degree of gentleness has a far reach with Georgia women. Through the kindness of Mrs. Branch La Far, of the department of publicity, the chapters will get an idea of how the Waters Avenue school of Savannah interest their grades in southern history, which could be employed in schools over the state. The Women in the War Between the States does credit to the fifth grade.

"Mrs. J. J. Harris, editor, will resume the editorial work in the next issue of the official page. This is our chiefest joy for September.

"The department of publicity urges that every chapter president appoint an able, interested publicity chairman to assume all duties of publicity for each meeting of chapter, preferably a reporter for all the state's daily newspapers, so that fullest publicity may be given your work.

"Especially do we urge that all communications or articles intended for official page be directed to Mrs. J. J. Harris, Sandersville, Ga.

"It would be especially a good plan—one suggested by the O. C. Horn chapter—to buy cuts of heroes whose birthdays we celebrate, to furnish local paper on occasions."

Women in the War.

The following story by Misses Nonalee Hurst and Ruby Mae Flynt was written for "Old and New Savannah," a history of Savannah prepared by the fifth grade of Waters Avenue school, of Savannah. The article was submitted by Mrs. Branch La Far, of Savannah.

The women played an important part in the war between the states. When the men went off to fight in the Confederate army, the women's eyes were red with weeping. They might never see their men again. There were children clinging to their father's hands. There were five-year-olds staring wide-eyed, not knowing what it was all about. There were sweethearts at the dock speaking words of encouragement to the brave men, our men of Savannah! The men tried to be cheerful and several clumsy attempts were made to quiet the wailing children . . .

Then followed a series of hardships for the women. They formed sewing circles and clubs. Many a carpet and rug which had been the glory of a parlor was cut into strips and made into blankets for the soldiers. The women cut up their own clothes and supply of cloth to make clothes for the Confederate boys. The women had to plow in the fields and bear many burdens while their fathers, sons, brothers and uncles were fighting for the southern cause.

The Savannah women took old hickory ashes and put them in a tub of water to make lye or soap. This home-made soap was used to wash dishes and clothes. Many of the mothers and older sisters had to wash out the dresses of the smaller children after they were in bed.

During the war between the states the people had no matches. They used flint, steel and scorched cotton to start fires. When night came on the southerners would take a lump of fire-coals and cover them up in order to have fire the next day. The women were afraid to burn candles at night during the war, because the northerners had the southern coast blockaded and so Savannah was cut of ffrom supplies. They didn't know when they could buy another supply of candles.

There was no coffee, tea or flour in the markets. The people had to use parched corn, rye or potatoes for coffee. They had to go to the woods and cut sassafras roots to make tea. In place of sugar, the women made a "long sweetening" or a stiff syrup by boiling the sugar cane juice in a vat. This "long sweetening" was used to sweeten coffee, tea and other foods.

The people only had cake about twice a year. Biscuits were a treat! The rich people had them about once a month while the poor pepole did not have them at all. The southern women ground corn into cornmeal and used it in place of flour. Cornbread and bacon were the main foods of the people and they were glad to get those.

When Sherman marched through Georgia, he marched from Atlanta to Savannah. His men were very cruel. They tore up the railroads and stole or killed the farm animals. This northern army burned bridges and houses.

There was a very brave and witty woman who was much smarter than the Yankees. When she heard the men coming she hid all of her silver under a mattress in a bedroom. Then she put three of her children in the bed. When the men came to the house she met them at the door and said "You may search this room if you like, but I'll warn you that I have three children in bed in there with black measles. Now go ahead and search." You may be sure that the soldiers kept away from that room.

It's a good thing that all of the northern soldiers weren't as cruel and wicked as Sherman. Sherman telegraphed President Lincoln and gave him the city of Savannah for a Christmas present.

When you look at the closely cropped heads of the women of Savannah today, can't you close your eyes and see those women of Confederate Savannah with large hoop skirts and their tiny bonnets on top of their heads? Their hair was long and they wore it in a heavy net at the back of their heads. Many of the women had such long hair that they could sit on it when it was down.

We think that the socks and stockings we wear today are very easy things to make, and they are. During the war between the states it took a long time to knit a single pair of socks, because it was all done by hand.

The women kept bolts of cloth at home instead of just buying several yards of cloth when they wanted to make a dress. Most of them wove their own cloth, though some of them bought it from the northern mills. The clothes for the family were nearly all made at the same time of the year.

The men had to stay away from home for a long time while they were fighting in the Confederate army. After they had been fighting for a time their officers would let them go home to look after their farms and families. When the soldiers had to slip through the lines of the enemy and pass through Savannah on their way home, the women of Savannah would give the men a place to sleep and something to eat. These women did this through their "wayside homes." The soldier had to have a note signed by his officer saying that he was not a northerner nor a deserter.

The kind Savannah women nursed the sick and wounded soldiers who passed through their town, while they thought of their husbands, brothers, sons or sweethearts who were fighting.

The women of Savannah were as brave as their soldiers in the Confederate army.

Covington in the Sixties.

The following story, written by Mrs. W. C. Clark, was submitted by Mrs. C. C. King, historian of the Covington chapter, U. D. C.

When one looks around Covington as she is today with her beautiful homes and spacious avenues, 'tis very hard to realize that just 67 years ago her people were full of sorrow and distress. The call to arms had been issued, and men and women were going hither and thither, preparing to enter a conflict never duplicated in the annals of history. War was declared in April, 1860, but nearly three years had been spent in relentless warfare before Covington saw the flash of the guns of the union army. Men were leaving nearly every day—homes were being closed and families were refugeeing. In July of 1864, every road leading into Covington, being closely guarded, one of the guards, stationed on the road parallel to the Georgia railroad from Atlanta, came galloping into Covington and reported that the Yankees were coming into Covington, for he could hear guns firing toward Conyers. One can imagine the horror that filled the hearts of the old men and women of the town when this news was heralded from house to house. True to the report, in a little while a detachment of troops, known as Wilson's Raiders, came into the town on the street now known as Emory avenue. There were about 150 men all mounted, and coming into Covington on what is known as Clark street, they turned their line of march southward and did not halt until they were immediately in front of the home now owned by Mrs. W. H. Pickett, but at that time Dr. W. D. Conyers owned the place and his family was living there. Colonel W. W. Clark, who was in the Confederate congress at Richmond, Va., having married Dr. Conyers' daughter, had moved his family from his home in the Clark Grove to Dr. Conyers' home for protection, and they were there when Wilson's Raiders, encamped around the home for the night.

The Union soldiers presented a very unsightly appearance. Their uniforms were very unkempt and very worn. This body of men only remained in Covington one night. They foraged about the lots of the homes and entering the back gate of Dr. Conyers home, they made their plans to break open what was known then as the smoke-house. Mrs. Conyers saw and heard them as they attempted to open the gate so she went out, and finding a commanding officer, she begged that he would protect her home. The officer heeded her imprecations and entering the backyard he stormily ordered the soldiers out of the premises. This raid spending only one night in Covington there were no casualties from this visit.

There were many Union men who were called stragglers that often came into the town even before the rords were guarded. Iverson Jones, who lived in the home just behind E. W. Fowler's home, had sworn that if a Yankee soldier came into Covington he would have to walk over his dead body. He was on the street near Mr. Fowler's present home when looking towards the Georgia depot, he saw two mounted Union men. He had his gun with him and as the two men came near him he leveled his gun at one and killed him instantly. The other man turned and shot Mr. Jones, mortally wounding him. Quite a crowd had gotten there by this time and lifting Mr. Jones into the home owned by the King family just where John Callaway now lives, he died on the porch of the King home in a few minutes after the shot was fired.

Stoneman's Raid was the largest division of Sherman's army that came into Covington. Sherman's march to the sea was made in three sections. One section went north of Covington. Stoneman's Raid of one thousand men came through Macon. 'Twas in September of 1864 when Stoneman's Raid marched into Covington coming from Atlanta over what is now known as Emory street. A hospital was made out of the Southern Masonic Female college, which stood just where the public school now stands. There was also constructed a hospital near the little stream which we know as Roger's branch, south of Dr. Wright's home.

The women of the town fed, clothed and nursed all the men who were brought to these hospitals and our soldiers who now sleep in our cemetery breathed their lives away in these two hospitals. These soldiers were brought here from Atlanta and other places, for there were no battles or even skirmishes near Covington.

Stoneman's Raid was in Covington only one night. The night of their encampment here they set fire to the hospital on Roger's branch, which had no patients in it at this time.

On the road going out to Porterdale just above the colored peoples' Methodist church, there was a Baptist church belonging to the white people. Our people had managed to raise and to save quite a lot of cotton which they stored in this old church, and this was also a prey to the flames. Over in that portion of Covington, which is now called North Covington, a Mr. Pringle Hyer had a large wood shop in the rear of his residence just off the street now called West street, and this was also in flames.

On July 22, 1864, Mr. George Daniel went to the Georgia depot to meet his daughter who was expected to return from Conyers, where she had been making a visit. He carried his gun with him, and when the Union men saw that he was armed they arrested him and had what was then known as a drum head court martial. He was sentenced to be shot and two Union soldiers carried him to the grove north of Col. W. W. Clark's residence, where he was shot.

These were the daily happenings on our now peaceful streets, in the stormy days of the 60s, and though 63 years have passed, the husky whisperings of pallid lips, the hurrying of anxious feet, and the stifled cry of a sobbing mother, bring to our hearts today the true and unconquerable spirit of our beautiful southland.

State D. A. R. Editor Greets Organization After Vacation

With the passing of August, the vacation period for most of us is at an end. September ushers in the first fall month when the laxity of the heated season gives way to renewed interest in all lines of business.

The business of the Georgia Daughters of the American Revolution should likewise take on renewed interest, when plans for the winter's work should be outlined, and all suspended activities be again taken up.

With the D. A. R. membership over on the increase, the many phases of the work of this patriotic organization assume greater importance each year, as the records of the state and national meetings will show.

The first message of the fall from the state regent, Mrs. Herbert M. Franklin, will be awaited with much interest by Georgia Daughters, when no doubt many interesting announcements will be made.

Along the line of renewed activities, the editor wishes to remind the D. A. R. to send to her direct all news of interest and importance to the organization. Historical papers are appreciated. Remember always, that help from each one of you makes the work of the editor easier, and results in a better D. A. R. column.

Mrs. Brosseau Issues Message To Georgia D. A. R. Members

"Civilization is a contract between the great dead, the living and the unborn."—Edmund Burke.

This month of September means something more than the heralding of glorious autumn. It's calendar marks on the seventeenth day the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the completion and signing of a great and notable document—the Constitution of the United States of America.

This country is but a comparatively recent landmark along the broad highway of history and yet we may well be proud of the fact that on some points of age we have a decided advantage over many of the older nations. Our flag antedates the colors of several countries, and the constitution is said to be the oldest written document still functioning in the world today.

It is a well-known fact that a state of practical terrorism beset the young country for many months of struggling emergence preceding the signing of the constitution. Business was disrupted; money possessed about the same value as scrap paper and the colonists had naturally grown restless and dissatisfied. Had it not been for the saving grace of this priceless document the country would undoubtedly have met with economic and social disaster from which it could hardly have righted itself.

Of this particular period Mr. Harry Atwood, that competent authority on the subject, says:

"It took slightly more than four months to write the constitution, almost a year to have it ratified by the states, and another year to set up the government under it; and yet, within three years conditions had so changed and Washington had so recovered from his depression because of the beneficent effects of the constitution that he began writing letters of hope and cheer to his friends." During that depressing period preceding the adoption of the constitution, Washington's letters had been pathetic expressions of the apprehension he felt for the security and the future of the country he had fought so hard to save. Many patriotic organizations of men and women throughout the country observe what is known as "Constitution Week." During that period there are presentations of historic pictures and pageants, and notable lectures are given on the constitution and the great contemperaneous events.

While many of the chapters may not have resumed full activities by that time it is my earnest hope that September 17, the day of such vital importance to this nation, will be fittingly observed in some manner by every Daughter of the American Revolution. That may mean participation in either civic plans or chapter programs, but some observance is necessary in order that we may keep the faith.

I would like to suggest that Mr. Atwood's latest book, "The Constitution Explained," might be of much service in the intensive study course which the national chairman of legislation is planning for the coming year. For one hundred and forty years the constitution has safeguarded the lives and the destinies of many generations of fortunate American citizens. Let us do our part toward helping to keep it the great bulwark of safety for the oncoming generations who are entitled to the same protection that we have enjoyed.

GRACE H. BROSSEAU,
President-General.

Colonel Peck Issues Interesting Data.

The following letter, written by W. M. Francis, president of the Georgia society, Sons of American Revolution, to Colonel R. H. Peck, is of interest to both Daughters and Sons of American Revolution:

"With a view of fostering the interest of those eligible to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution it has been suggested that there be a committee appointed from our society. The object of this committee is intended in general to assist those interested, whether members or not, to perfecting their coat-of-arms; the hope being, of course, that it may result in their becoming members. Appreciating your interest along this line, permit me to ask that you act as chairman of that committee and with the authority to select such assistants as you may wish in order to complete a committee."

Colonel Peck announces that Colonel P. M. Stevens has accepted membership on the above appointed committee, and he and Colonel Peck will be glad to give their aid to all interested. They will be found at 215 Red Rock building from 8:30 a. m. to 4 p. m. daily, except Saturday afternoons.

Colonel Peck also announces that the Longworth's Book Shop at 106 Forsyth street has offered to aid in this work, by having Goodspeed, Morrison and other genealogical book stores send books for inspection, these books to be returned if data desired is not found, the only charge being cost of transportation. Colonel Peck also announces that H. F. Linder, 5 Plaza way, is organizing the details of painting the coats-of-arms, as well as aiding the research. Samples of such work will be found in his office.

Ruth goes Shopping

ON a shopping trip through Rich's I visited the new House Furnishings Department and Mr. John R. Webb, who has been interested in house furnishings for a number of years and is known to many Atlanta women, ver kindly went through the department with me.

We all realize that this is the age of speed, everything is built to enable us to accomplish more in the course of a day, or a year, and for the housewife who has much to do in the twelve daylight hours there must be up-to-date household appliances to help her in her work, so that her daily chores will be easier and her work more of a pleasure than a drudge.

In this new house furnishing department at Rich's you will find everything that the moderu woman could wish for to make her home more complete, and save innumerable hours of work, by the use of these time-saving devices. Imported novelties for the house and kitchen, baskets, hampers, woven basinets, anything in the way of useful baskets, aluminum ware of every description, Vollrath ware, every conceivable modern appliance.

There were brass andirons, with the screen to match, either of highly polished or hammered brass; some were of hammered metal resembling silver. Such things as these andirons would enhance the beauty of any home.

The Hendryx and the Linderman are two well-known makes of bird cages carried by Rich's Household Department.

Paris looks leniently on the belt discarded and adopts the vestee for a badge of smartness.

I HAVE something to tell you that should be of the greatest interest to every woman who is interested in a well furnished home.

Chamberlin-Johnson furniture department is offering something really fine in a Grand Rapids bedroom suite in burl walnut, with the new fall pattern vanity dresser, four poster bed, chest of drawers, a bench and chairs. This suite is concrete evidence of what can be had in Grand Rapids quality at a low price today. The five pieces being priced at only $238.00.

Then for the dining room they have at Chamberlin-Johnson's a ten-piece Duncan Phyfe suite, mahogany done in the soft light colors of the old antique Salem mahogany. This lovely suite has the typical Duncan Phyfe base with brass capped feet. The entire ten pieces are priced at only $370.00. Any piece can be bought separately if desired.

These exceptional values will doubtless be sold very quickly and I want any of my readers who are interested in furniture for the home to go to Chamberlin-Johnson's and see these suites, for they will be well worth seeing, if nothing else, as examples of what can be had at very little money in things that are really worth while.

Chamberlin-Johnson's furniture department is something out of the ordinary, there you will always find the unusual in furniture.

Just as a woman expresses her personality in her dress, so does she express her personality in the way she furnishes her home, and Chamberlin's have furniture to please the fastidious.

So I want you to go to Chamberlin-Johnson's Furniture Department, and see if you are not intrigued by the lovely things you will find there.

Felt hats are firmly entrenched in the mode.

Leopard coats with fox collars are very smart.

THE first thought that occurred to me upon arriving in Atlanta after my vacation was that I needed a new fall hat.

And hearing that Allen's buyer had just returned from abroad with the latest importations in fall millinery I felt that I would be sure to find the very hat I wanted.

The beautiful array of hats had that look of distinction that is characteristic of any hat purchased at Allen's.

Small velvet hats trimmed with jeweled ornaments, some of velvet with applique of self material, simple and charming, yet so chic. French felts, soleil velours, gold and silver satin dance hats, and many tailored and dressy velvets.

I could hardly decide on one since there were so many exquisite hats from which to select. One that especially took my eye was a large hat for formal afternoon wear. Exquisite, stunning, typically Allen hats. I could write at length on Allen's hats but to really appreciate them you should go to Allen's and feast your eyes on the ultra smart, carefully selected imports from Paris.

MR. RICH has an uncanny ability to guess correctly the personality of the hundreds of women who would not go anywhere else but to the Artistic Bob Shop to have their hair cut and dressed. The secret of his success was revealed to me as I sat in this shop and watched him fashion each girl's hair into a becoming bob.

For the day when hair was cut to pattern is passed. Today milady's hair is cut to personality, and in the style best suited to her beauty—each bob, new and distinctive, bringing out the features to the best advantage.

As I watched Mr. Rich work his skill was remarkable. As he clipped the hair into a pages bob or into an eton crop, or maybe a swirl, putting soft waves in with his fingers or arranging swirls over the ears. No head of hair is cut and left as such, but is dressed also. The result being a smart bob that cannot be achieved unless it is treated in this manner.

Mr. Rich and his nine assistants are experts in the art of arranging the coiffure. Whether you wish a permanent wave, finger wave or water wave, you have only to go to the Artistic Bob Shop, located on the balcony of Jacobs' main store at Five Points.

Modern jewelry complements the perfectly composed coiffure and is a grace note to the ensemble. Carved emeralds, diamond and enamel are effectively combined.

Ninth District Convention Meets in Norcross in November

With Mrs. J. R. Garner as hostess, the Norcross Woman's club met Thursday with a large membership present, Mrs. W. M. Keady, the president, presiding.

The club's public library came in for much discussion as to ways and means of raising money as the annual birthday party, an interesting subject, will be given the early part of October. The ninth district meeting will be held in Norcross in November with both clubs, the Civic and the Woman's club, as hostesses. Many interesting plays were suggested for the entertainment of this convention. Mrs. A. A. O'Kelly, chairman of citizenship, reported that the board of school trustees expressed a desire that a woman be elected on the board, as the advice of a woman is sometimes an absolute necessity and she urged the full vote of the club; also the election of a lady for the board of school trustees.

Miss Key's Report.

Miss Lola Key, librarian, gave a fine report of the financial condition of the library, having $1,000 as a permanent loan fund. The library is entirely self-supporting and that up until now no money had been used or required to pay for new books or pay the librarian's salary from the general fund. Mrs. J. E. McElroy made a motion, which was unanimously carried, that the Woman's club write a card of thanks to Mrs. Frank West, of Atlanta, for the splendid collection of 26 popular books of fiction and history, recently contributed to the library. Mrs. Lorenzo D. Ewing announced that the juniors were arranging a musical entertainment, having as a drawing feature Miss Beulah Shirley, of Alpharetta, an honor pupil of Chicago Conservatory of Music. The purpose of this entertainment is for the benefit of Tallulah Falls Industrial school.

Mrs. J. E. McElroy gave a talk on the duties of various chairmen, urging the advantages of keeping books recording work at the time it is done, for by so doing, a chairman would not have any trouble in making a required report correctly. The program arranged for by Mrs. T. D. McDaniel, chairman of home and school improvement, and Mrs. A. A. O'Kelly, chairman American citizenship, was specially interesting. Those taking part were Mrs. H. V. Jones, on illiteracy; Mrs. Ben Summerour, music; Mrs. John Simpson, kindergarten; the essay on kindergarten was written by Miss Julia Reynolds, a student at Harrisonburg, Va. Mrs. A. A. O'Kelley read an article by the late Mrs. Nellie Peters Black on illiteracy and on club work generally.

Chairmen Appointed.

Mrs. W. M. Keady, club president, read the names of club chairmen for the year as follows: Department of American citizenship, Mrs. A. A. O'Kelley divisions citizenship training, Mrs. A. A. O'Kelley; cooperations, with world war veterans, Miss Bertie Burnett; division civics, Mrs. J. R. Garner; division junior clubs, Mrs. Lorenzo D. Ewing; department American homes, Mrs. T. D. McDaniel; division home economics, Miss Lena Bess Medlock; division home demonstration, Mrs. R. E. Skinner; division home-making, Mrs. A. J. Sears; department of education, Mrs. L. B. DeJarnette; division library extension, Miss Lola Key; division natural resources, Mrs. Dora K. Webster; division community service, Mrs. B. F. Summerour; division home and school improvement, Mrs. T. D. McDaniel; division good roads and highways, Mrs. M. C. Rhodes; division memorial trees, Miss Flonnie Clement; division motion pictures, Miss Elsie Garner; division illiteracy, Mrs. O. O. Simpson, Jr.; division kindergarten, Mrs. John Simpson; department of legislation, Mrs. J. E. McElroy; department of public welfare, Mrs. H. J. Reynolds; division health, Mrs. W. M. McElroy; division thrift, Miss Ann Ray; department of fine art, Mrs. H. V. Jones; division music, Mrs. Lorenzo D. Ewing; division literature, Mrs. H. H. Miller; division art, Mrs. T. A. Rainey; department of press and publicity, Mrs. J. E. McElroy; department of Tallulah Falls school, Mrs. Lorenzo D. Ewing.

Mrs. Gillentine Spends Winter in Nashville.

Mrs. Flora M. Gillentine, prominent clubwoman, who has held the chair of psychology at the Middle Tennessee State Teachers' College at Murfreesboro for several years, will spend this winter in Nashville, Tenn., having been given a two-years' leave of absence by the college to obtain her Ph. D., degree which she will take at Peabody College. Mrs. Gillentine will be located this winter at the home of Miss Lillian Rice, 2117 Highland avenue. She will also study during the two years at the University of Chicago at Leland Stanford and the University of California. She will specialize in "Pre-school Child Education."

Mrs. Gillentine, who is an authority on educational phychology, went to New York two years ago this fall and studied at Columbia University, where she received her master's degree in June, 1925.

Mrs. Gillentine, whose coming to Nashville will be welcomed by many friends, is a leader in a number of women's organizations of the state. She has been president of the Tennessee Federation of Women's clubs and was state regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She was also vice president of the national D. A. R. and has held other important offices.

Covington Club Adds New Members At Recent Meeting

Covington Woman's club met in the library on Tuesday afternoon, with Mrs. S. L. Waites, president, in the chair, and Mrs. W. F. Lee, secretary. Mrs. H. B. McDonald, treasurer, reported $43 made from the Ladies' Home Journal subscription drive and $3.35 from sale of tin foil and a balance of hand of $196.08.

Mrs. W. C. Clark made an appeal for donations to the club booth at Newton County fair held this month and it was well responded to. It was decided to serve a tea during the U. D. C. convention in October.

The club hour for meeting was changed from 4 o'clock to 3:30 during the fall and winter months. The following ladies were unanimously elected to membership in the club: Mesdames J. C. Spivey, Sam Avery, T. L. McMullan, P. J. Rogers and Butler Rogers.

The following program was presented by the program committee. Vocal solo, Miss Annie Pauline Anderson; Senator R. P. Lester gave an excellent talk on the "Child Welfare Movement;" chorus in costume from the musical comedy, "Here Comes Arabella;" piano and violin selection, Misses Annie Pauline Anderson and Myrtle Estes. Refreshments were served by the following hostesses: Mesdames L. H. Smith, chairman; W. T. Thomas, W. Trox Bankston, T. W. Heard, W. W. Ammons, L. D. Bolton and M. J. Moorehouse.

Mrs. Brantley Receives Decatur Year Book.

Mrs. A. P. Brantley acknowledges, with thanks, year book of Decatur Woman's club.

Mrs. Alford Presented For National Office.

The Michigan Federation of Women's Clubs presents Mrs. William R. Alford, of Detroit, as a candidate for recording secretary of the General Federation of Women's Clubs for the biennial period of 1928-1930. This action is taken with the unanimous vote of the board of directors of the Michigan state federation. Signed: Mrs. Alfred J. Knapp, president; Mrs. W. W. Eisk, corresponding secretary.

Young Poet Enrolls at Tallulah On Scholarship of State Club

Among the pupils of the new year at Tallulah Falls is a little girl who has the good luck to have enlisted the interest of one of Georgia's most sterling clubs, who are giving her her scholarship at Tallulah Falls school. Her appreciation is well expressed in the following note, to the club at large: "I just want to thank each and every one of you for arranging for me to go to Tallulah Falls school. I hope I won't disappoint you and I assure you that I will take advantage of this wonderful opportunity and learn all I can."

Some months ago this little girl wrote to the children's page of the Atlanta Journal, and her letter appeared with the statement from the editor that the copy was so well prepared that no correction was needed and that it had been turned over to the printer without alteration. This seemed quite a compliment to a girl of 11 years. She does not confine herself to prose, but falls into verse very easily and happily. A spring cycle is as follows:

March.

Winds are whistling,
Baby birds are lisping,
Violets are peeping,
Green grass is creeping,

The trees are dressed in a beautiful gown,
Old winter looks down on all with a frown,
But the sun quickly drives him away;
The snow melts and spring holds sway.

April.

April is the month of showers—
Preparing the way for May's flowers.
Rubbers and raincoats we must wear,
Also a rubber hood over our hair.

May.

May is the month of sunshine
Happy days and flowers fine.
Then in May there comes vacation,
A happy day throughout the nation.

These are the months of spring,
What happy hours they bring!
Picnics and swimming, fun overbrimming, in spring.

March seems to be a special source for the inspiration and receives a second tryout in the following:

March.

Winds are whistling,
Baby birds are lisping,
Violets are peeping,
Flowers are creeping
In March.

Tiny buds cover the trees—
Nature never lets them freeze—
Bright, new, green leaves come out;
In such a time why pout?

Springs are bubbling over,
Icicles seek cover,
In March.

How could we be other than happy,
How could we be mean and snappy,
In March?

Her own home town gives the little poetess an occasion for an outburst which may not be poetry, but is certainly a good bit of publicity:

Of ——— County,———'s the county seat;
Its roads are scraped and its streets kept neat.
It has no lack of pretty flowers,
Shiny fountains and dark green bowers.
It boasts of a college—not every town can—
And landscapes fair for the eye to scan.
On a big red hill stands the public school,
Flourishing under most excellent rule.
The Woman's club has done its part,
And keeps on doing with cheerful heart.
Carnegie library is open to all,
And we have, also, a city hall.
Our fire department just can't be beat;
When you hear them coming, clear the street!
Our picture show is one of the best;
Mr.——— does his part, and we do the rest.
Our thoughts can now be full of cheer;
The hydroelectric power is here.
Of beautiful churches we have three, where
You are welcome—come and see.
If we look in the center of the square
We'll see a monument standing there.
Our hats come off and we bow our head
To the gallant soldiers, long since dead.

With the inspiration of the "Light in the Mountains" and all of its duties, there can be little question that this little poet will increase and expand as time goes on, and we shall all doubtless be very proud of her.

Millen Woman's Club Issues Year Book Of Twenty-Six Pages

State headquarters has received the Millen Woman's club year-book for 1927-1928, with 26 pages of interesting information about this very active and progressive club. The course of study is given on first page as "Programs of Travel," supplemented by departmental studies. Three pages are given to names of executive board and committees; collect, "Georgia Land," "America, the Beautiful" and a song written for the Millen Woman's club and sung to the tune of "America," follow.

The names of club orchestra and chorus are assigned a page showing the appreciation given this important feature. The programs are well planned and the chorus and orchestra have a part in each one. The hostesses are, September, the officers; October, better homes and legislation committees; November, armistice program at high schools, also a regular meeting with education committee as hostesses; December, fine arts committee; January, ways and means committee; February, cemetery committee; May day pageant, public health department, regular May meeting, the civic committee; June, the annual club luncheon. The constitution, by-laws and list of members are given in full.

The Millen club occupies rooms and is making money for a clubhouse which they are looking forward to.

Taylorsville Club Holds Meeting.

The Taylorsville Feltonian Woman's club was entertained last Friday afternoon by Mrs. J. A. Walker and Mrs. Roy Cannon, of Stilesboro, at the home of Mrs. Walker. The president, Mrs. Jolley, called the meeting to order. The amount of $5 was reported in the treasury from the sale of waste paper, sandwiches, etc., and $3 was sent to Tallulah school, which amount was made from the "birthday party" for the school. There is also $3 on hand to go toward memorial bridge fund, given by friends of the club. The president asked for a subscription to be taken to raise the club's part on the memorial fund, which amounted to about $8. The president instructed the payment of this amount to Mrs. A. R. Davis, a member of this committee, which Mrs. Claude Irby, of Kingston, as chairman. The entire contribution from all four of the Taylorville women's organizations amounted to $25.

The club voted to sell sandwiches during the fall months, and the following committee was appointed to see after this: Mrs. J. R. Harling, Mrs. J. S. Edwards and Mrs. Lee Jolley.

Mrs. A. R. Davis told the club that she gained information from the Club Institute held recently at Rockmart, which shows the "Ella F. White" dues one year behind. A "note of thanks" was read from Mrs. C. R. McGarity, district president, thinking the club for its part in a little gift to her new baby, little Minnie Maybelle. The program committee for October on "Music" is as follows: Mrs. E. O. Davis and Mrs. A. R. Davis. The club meets in September with Mrs. M. A. Perry and in October with Mrs. M. J. Hitchcock.

Misses Helen and Ina Jolley rendered musical selections. The hostesses were assisted by Misses Helen and Ina Jolley and Alta Sproul. Besides the regular members present were the following specially invited guests: Mrs. Henderson, Mrs. Ratia Henderson, Miss Lizette Henderson, Mrs. W. B. Taylor, Misses Helen and Ina Jolley and Mrs. Alta Sproull.

Card of Thanks Issued by Seventh District President

Mrs. Charles B. McGarity, of Dallas, seventh district president of the Georgia Federation, issues the following card of appreciation:

"Miss Belle Bayless, treasurer, special scholarship fund and club women of seventh district—My Dear Club Women:

"I wish to express appreciation and thanks to you for your recent expression of congratulations extended to Mr. McGarity and me upon the arrival of our little daughter, Minnie Mabel.

"I further desire to thank you for the gracious gift of a bank deposit of $26 to her credit, with the assurance that it is a joy to know that my friends and co-workers in the district wish this to form the nucleus of an educational scholarship for her. Truly, she is fortunate to claim as her godmothers all the wonderful women of the seventh district.

"It is my hope that it will be her privilege to be a junior club mother and later to have and appreciate the many ties of friendship that come from associations formed in senior club work.

"Thanking you for your loyalty and cooperation and your many acts of kindness to me during my administration."

Vidalia Club Will Distribute Antitoxin to 200

The Vidalia Woman's club met Thursday afternoon at the Scout house with Mesdames Floyd Johnson and N. O. Carter and Misses Ila McLemore and Ruby Darby acting as hostesses. An address was given by the president, Mrs. R. E. Ledford.

Master Robert Giles, who has won many honors in music, rendered a piano solo.

Enough diphtheria toxin antitoxin has been secured by Mrs. C. D. Williams, chairman of the twelfth district public health committe, for the immunization of 200 children, given free of charge to children under 7 years of age. The Bronte Study club and the P.-T. A. are assisting in this work.

The annual reception given by the community service committee for the Vidalia school faculty will be held Friday evening at the home of Mrs. P. J. McNatt. A benefit bridge party will be given next Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. Hal Macon, the proceeds to be applied to the clubhouse fund.

Bethany Society Holds Meeting.

Circle No. 2, of Bethany Missionary society, met Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Mason on Elinor place with circle chairman, Mrs. H. T. Pratt, presiding.

A cakeless cake sale was held at this meeting and $10.25 was realized from same. Plans for a manless wedding were completed for September 30 at Bethany club auditorium. Admission will be 25 cents. A fish fry was planned for November 2.

The baby division of the entire society will be entertained September 16 from 3 to 5 o'clock at the club house.

Inventions Speed Up Football Game

The inquisitive and inventive mind, seeking new and better ways to do things, has not neglected football. Fast and accurate footwork, for example, is developed by an ingenious new method of training players devised by Dick Hanley, coach at Northwestern university. This is a novel form of hurdle race in which the runners, at full speed, must step in the center of boxes laid in zigzag pattern on the ground. This footwork, says Popular Science Monthly, not only "peps up" the men, but teaches them to dodge opposition as they race for a touchdown. Tacklers have no terrors for them after they have learned to leap through the box-like barriers.

Adjustable football cleats of bakelite are among science's newest contributions to the sport. Unlike the usual cleats of leather, they do not soak up water on a wet field.

From the old game of heavy men and heavy armor has come a new game of speedy scrimmage and running. Hence the latest suit, invented by the coach of the University of Washington football team, weighs only seven pounds. Foam rubber replaces the usual fiber padding. The lightest uniform used previously weighed ten pounds more.

The reduced weight has been achieved by the substitution of foam rubber for the fiber padding previously employed. The new uniforms protect the players as much as the old, and are much faster.

Skinless "Hot Dogs."

The thornless rose and seedless orange are joined now by the skinless "hot dog," according to Popular Science Monthly. The frankfurters are inclosed in a synthetic vegetable covering instead of the usual membranous skin. The vegetable jacket is removed after the "dogs" take shape and before they are shipped to market from the factory.

O. E. S. Chapter Plans Benefit Card Party.

The first fall activity of Clara Henrich Memorial Chapter No. 263, Order of Eastern Star, will be a benefit card party to be held on the Ansley hotel roof, September 30, at 8 o'clock.

Play at the tables will not be confined to "bridge" or any one game, but will be governed by the players themselves. The evening hour has been selected to afford the gentlemen an opportunity to compete.

Tables to accommodate four players will be promptly reserved at $2 per table, through application to Mrs. Swift Tyler, Hemlock 1719-W, Mrs. F. Ridley, West 3356-M, Mrs. Charles A. Williams, Hemlock 3162, or by letter to Mrs. Charles Hilt, 842 Tift avenue, worthy matron.

Julian Boehm To Be Honor Guest.

The Atlanta Business and Professional Woman's club holds its business dinner Wednesday evening, September 14, at 6 o'clock, at the Winecoff hotel. Julian Boehm will be honor guest.

Members who have not given in their birthday dates and whose birthday comes in September are asked to please call Hemlock 6147-J and report to Mrs. Forrest McKinney.

The twentieth annual session of Woodberry Hall, 149 Peachtree Circle, will begin Monday, September 12th, at 8:30 a. m. Following the chapel service of morning prayer and address by the Rev. N. High Moor, registration and organization of classes will mark the opening day.

Peel Off Freckles, Tan or Sunburn

Summer sun and winds cause tan, sunburn, discolorations and other skin troubles, which spoil a normally good complexion. When used as directed, a little pure mercolized wax, procurable at any drug store, will peel off the skin, without discomfort, a little each day until freckles, tan, liver spots, large pores, and all blemishes vanish. The under skin will appear clear, smooth and white, with that look of radiant freshness every woman should have. Mercolized wax brings out the hidden beauty. To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines, use this face lotion: 1 ounce powdered saxolite and 1 half pint witch hazel.—(adv.)

Back To Work.

Vacation over, the idea uppermost in everybody's mind is "back to work."

Church activities, allowed to lag somewhat during the summer months, are beginning again in earnest.

The doors of the colleges and schools are open and the boys and girls, young men and young women, are pouring into them ready for another term of study in preparation for the problems of life.

At the same time the doors of opportunity are being opened to church leaders where they may apply themselves in a period of study looking toward more efficiency in the work to which they have been called.

September 14 to 16 a missionary institute will be sponsored by the Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of Georgia at Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church and September 19 the Methodist women of north Georgia will open their first coeducational, non-denominational leadership training school at Emory university.

Just as a young person is handicapped in life when he fails to accept educational advantages offered, just so is the church handicapped in its world program when its leaders fail to accept the opportunities that come from training.

The motto for this month should be, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman who needeth not to be ashamed," and then "back to work" with a greater desire to serve, a better knowledge of how to serve, and a broader plan of activity for the churches of Georgia.

Mrs. Woodruff Writes Article On Episcopal Conference

Mrs. Frank Woodruff, Episcopal editor for the official church page in The Constitution, attended the summer conference at Sewanee, Tenn., and contributes the following illuminating article today under the caption of "Summer Conference at Sewanee."

"Since 1922 these summer training schools have been held at the University of the South, but, according to the faculty as well as those who have attended in previous years, the session just closed was in all respects the most gratifying and successful to those in attendance, both in the young people's division and the adult division, approximately 550, beside the many registered visitors in the classes, the experiences of August, 1927, will ever remain a delightful memory.

"The dioceses which own Sewanee are in Alabama, Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Texas. While there was a representation from these several states, from the Atlanta diocese alone there was an attendance of approximately 40 people. Others came from such far-away places as southwest Texas, Wisconsin, Massachusetts and New York, while three missionaries to China proved an interesting addition, both in the teaching staff and as learners.

"A notable feature of the conference was the fact that in the general representation about six per cent were of the clergy, and another notable fact was that five bishops were of this number. Among the teachers, several of whom gave their services as an offering unto the Lord, there were many who have achieved high scholastic distinction, beginning with the Right Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, lately retired as president of the national Episcopal council, to resume connection with his beloved University of the South of which he is chancellor and Dr. Benjamin F. Finney, vice chancellor. Others were the Right Rev. Lewis Burton, president of the fourth province; the Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, bishop of South Carolina; the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, bishop co-adjutor of North Carolina; the Rt. Rev. William Mercer Green, bishop co-adjutor of Mississippi and director of the adult conference; the Right Rev. Frank A. Juhan, bishop co-adjutor of Florida and director of the young people's conference.

"Limited space forbids a general mention of the outstanding scholars who composed the teaching staff but a few names must suffice: The Rev. Charles Boynton, professor of religious education, General Theological seminary, New York; the Rev. Burton S. Easton, General Theological seminary, New York city, who is conceded to be one of the highest authorities in the interpretation of New Testament literature; the Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, general missioner of the field department, national council; the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, executive educational secretary, province of Sewanee; the Rev. Hope H. Lumpkin, Madison, Wis.; the Rev. Harold Holt, field worker, national department of Christian Social Service; the Rev. R. A. Kirchoffer, associate secretary, national field department; the Rev. Homer W. Starr, education field worker; the Rev. Charles L. Wells, dean of the theological department; the Rev. C. B. Wilmer, professor of practical theology; the Rev. Mercer P. Logan, dean of DuBose Memorial Church Training school; the Rev. W. A. Jonnard and Dr. Leon C. Palmer, general secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and author of various text books.

Women Teachers.

"Of women teachers there was also a goodly and distinguished number among whom was Miss Laura E. Boyer, assistant educational secretary to the national council, with headquarters in New York city, and Miss Annie Morton Stout, educational field worker in the fourth province. Mrs. John R. Wheeler, of Nashville, Tenn., was the capable and inspiring director of all the conferences for women which were held each afternoon at 5 o'clock on the university campus. To Mrs. Loaring Clark, president for the fourth province of the Daughters of the King, was also due much of the consecrated and devotional spirit which characterized the meetings. No mention of these conferences would be completed without special allusion to Miss Bumstead, who came as a delegate from the Wellsley, Mass. conference; to Mrs. Olive Chisolm, of St. Mary's school, Shanghai, China, and Miss Young, another splendid missionary who has been teaching in a school at Nanking.

"As we make a brief survey of the experience of these two weeks of intensive training for leadership in various departments of the church and the church school, we find ourselves trying to condense into a few words the outstanding impressions made upon us. First of all we are conscious of a deepened sense of the meaning and mission of the church, not of the Episcopal church only, but of the great Catholic church which is Christ's representative on earth. We realize more than ever what a responsibility rests upon each individual Christian not only to work in the church, but to give loyal allegiance to Christ's teachings and to be His witnesses.

"As never before we can visualize how the church with outstretched arms is taking thought for the unfortunate and the erring; how she cares for the sick, how patiently she guides the steps here in our own land of the negro, the Indian and the foreign-born, how she cheers the lonely and penniless, clothing for the needy, how in the darkness of northern lands she is following in the Master's service of 'preaching, teaching and healing;' while, to sum it all up, she is at home and in foreign lands pointing the way to Him who alone can save the body as well as the soul."

Covington Society Holds Meeting.

Covington, Ga., September 10.—The Woman's Missionary society of the First Methodist church of Covington met at the church on Monday afternoon, September 5, at 4 o'clock, Mrs. W. C. Clark presiding in the absence of the president, Mrs. R. R. Fowler, who has been ill for several weeks.

Mrs. J. S. Dooly reported eight present at Epworth Junior league. Mrs. W. C. Clark and Mrs. J. A. Wright were appointed representatives to the Emory school of missions, September 19-23. Mrs. W. C. Clark was appointed to prepare a paper on the early history of the society, to be used at celebration of year of jubilee in 1928.

WOMEN APPROACHING MIDDLE AGE

Pass Through This Trying Period in Good Condition by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MRS. HARVEY TUCKER
R. R. 9, SHELBYVILLE, IND.

"Grow old along with me, The best is yet to be"

With her children grown up, the middle-aged woman finds time to do the things she never had time to do before—read the new books, see the new plays, enjoy her grandchildren, take an active part in church and civic affairs. Far from being pushed aside by the younger set, she finds a full, rich life of her own. That is, if her health is good.

Thousands of women of middle age, say they owe their vigor and health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Those who have learned through their own experience the merit of this dependable medicine are enthusiastic in recommending it to their friends and neighbors.

"I had been in bad condition for three months. I could not do my work. One day I read what your medicine had done and just had a feeling that it would help me, so I sent and got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had only taken half a bottle when I got up and started to do my work. It gave me an appetite, and helped me wonderfully. I can not praise this medicine highly enough. I surely will advise all women and girls to take it, and they don't have to use rouge to look healthy. My two daughters are taking it now and one is also using the Sanative Wash. I am willing to have you use this testimonial and I will answer letters from women asking about the medicine."—MRS. HARVEY TUCKER, R. R. No. 9, Shelbyville, Indiana.

"I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the little books you give away and began to take the medicine. After the first few bottles I began to feel better and could eat better and had fewer headaches. I feel like a different person. At anytime that I don't feel good I take the Vegetable Compound again, as I always keep a bottle on hand. You may use this letter for every word is true. I will answer any letters sent to me."—MRS. JENNIE BOLLERMAN, 611-11th St., Union City, N. J.

State Editor Makes Helpful Suggestions To Church Page

Mrs. J. W. Wills, state editor of the official church page in The Constitution, has written the following helpful suggestions to contributors to Federated Church Women's page in the official page of The Constitution, which, if followed, will be of invaluable aid to those interested in the church page:

1. Get publicity to denominational editor not later than Wednesday, to insure its appearance in the following Sunday issue.
2. Make articles as brief as consistent with news value. The use of few adjectives is desirable.
3. News of outstanding activities of individual societies, in Atlanta and throughout the state is welcomed.
4. The "Briefly Told" column is especially commended as a splendid avenue for such publicity.
5. Articles of city-wide and state-wide and of interdenominational interest are of especial value and entitled to larger space.
6. The calendar of meetings, in charge of Mrs. Arthur Hale, should be used by publicity chairmen of organizations.
7. Remind contributors of the money value of space in newspaper columns or of the value of time in a newspaper office, or of the importance that all copy should be in as good form (plain and convenient) as it is possible for the contributor to make it.
8. Cooperation with the denominational editors, and with those interested in the official church page in The Constitution, will insure best results in making a worth-while and widely-read woman's church page.

Church Meetings

Send announcements for calendar to Mrs. Arthur Hale, 1050 Gordon street, S. W.)

The friends of Israel Prayer league meet at Wesley Memorial church Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The Rev. Jacob Gartenhaus will address the meeting, and the constitution, as revised, will be read and adopted.

Briefly Told

Baptist Woman's Missionary societies throughout the south are celebrating during September the week of prayer for state missions. Let no society fail to observe this important yearly program.

Mrs. C. C. Hudson, president of Oakland City W. M. U., reports an all-day observance of state mission week of prayer with 45 present. The speakers were Mrs. J. T. Bowles, president of Third Baptist W. M. S. and Mrs. W. H. S. Dorsey, secretary of fifth district of Atlanta W. M. U.

The W. M. S. of First Baptist church, Mrs. B. L. Bugg, president, made arrangements for the reception given to Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Schofield Thursday evening, September 8. Mr. Schofield is the new musical director and is to assist in other church activities.

In the death of Mrs. John A. White on September 1 the W. M. S. of Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church and Woman's Bible class have sustained a sad loss. Mrs. White was recently secretary of third district of W. M. U. of the Atlanta association.

There was an unusually successful missionary rally in August at the Second Baptist church, called by Mrs. W. M. Jones, superintendent of B. W. M. U. Mrs. Ben S. Thompson, of Madison, Ga., made an address on the ruby anniversary and Mrs. J. B. Shepherd, returned missionary, gave an account of the school work in which she and her husband are engaged in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Atlanta Goodwill industry of the M. E. church, south, it was voted to make a monthly donation of $25 to the Methodist board of city missions for the purpose of establishing a kindergarten in connection with the Wesley Community house at 346 Whitehall street. The remainder of the amount necessary to carry on this new work will be given by individuals and organized Sunday school classes in the different Methodist churches of the city.

Miss Katie Herndon, of Kinston, N. C., is making her home in the Wesley Community house at 346 Whitehall street. Miss Herndon was graduated from Scarritt College for Christian Workers, in Nashville, Tenn., last June and is employed by the Methodist board of city missions as assistant to Miss Bessie Allen, who is head resident of the Community house.

Miss Elizabeth Dent leaves the latter part of the month for Nashville, Tenn., to enter Scarritt College for Christian Workers, the training school of the M. E. church, south.

The Woman's society of the Peachtree Christian church, of which Mrs. H. D. Couts is president, met Tuesday at the church. A program was in charge of Mrs. Edgar Craighead. These women are installing a handsome new organ in the new church.

Mrs. S. P. Paschal, secretary of the seventh district of Baptist W. M. S., organized at Mount Paran, a suburb church, September 7 two new societies—a W. M. S. and a Sunbeam band, each one having a membership of fourteen.

Methodist News of Interest Throughout State of Georgia

The district meeting of the South Atlanta district was held Wednesday, September 7, at St. John's church. Mrs. J. C. White presided, assisted by her secretary, Mrs. W. J. Culpepper. The morning session was opened with a devotional by Rev. A. A. Edmondson. Roll call showed a representative response from almost all the societies in the district.

Mrs. D. M. Therrell, president of Park Street auxiliary, gave a splendid talk on "The Standard of Excellence," showing that we should have a goal and keep our eyes steadfastly fixed on it.

Miss Louise Ballard, who has recently returned from China, where she was teaching in McTiere school, at Shanghai, was introduced to the body, and gave an illuminating talk on conditions in that land. She introduced three Chinese girls, who are on their way to Macon to enter Wesleyan college. Mrs. W. C. McDonald spoke on the social service department of work, urging the use of the Bible as a handbook for a guide in social service work. Mrs. W. A. Albright laid before the body the plans for the school of missions, which convenes at Emory university September 19 to 23. Many good things are promised those who register and avail themselves of this splendid opportunity to obtain information which will enable them to carry on more efficiently in God's Kingdom. Mrs. Fox gave a beautiful talk on "Service," using a poster for illustration. Mrs. Edward Akin and her young people gave a most interesting report of their work.

St. Paul Society.

The literary meeting of the W. M. S. of St. Paul church was held at the church Monday, Mrs. Black's circle in charge. "Love Lifted Me" was used as the opening song. Mrs. I. E. Sayer led the prayer. Mrs. W. S. Carroll gave a very helpful devotional and Miss Lizzie Black gave a musical selection on the piano. Mrs. Charles Lozier and Mrs. P. D. Rawlings gave a duet, accompanied by Mrs. Taurman on the piano. Mexico was the subject for the afternoon, and the following ladies took part in the leaflet: Mesdames Pierson, McDaniel, J. T. Black, I. E. Sayer, Charles Lozier, Sorrell, Taurman, W. S. Carroll and P. D. Rawlings.

Mrs. Ballenger presided over the business session. Good reports were given by the circles. Mrs. W. M. Pharr gave a very encouraging report from the "Myrtle McDonald" scholarship in Cuba. Mrs. Marion Sharp read a letter from Mrs. Albright, emphasizing our prayer special which is the children's work.

Jonesboro Missionary Society.

The W. M. S. of Jonesboro met Monday at the church, Mrs. C. B. Lyle presiding. The Bible lesson was handled in a splendid way by Miss Ida Hutchinson. After the presentation of the bulletin, "Changing Currents in Mexico" was discussed by several members of the society. Interest centers now in the new mission book, "A Straight Road to Tomorrow," plans being made for an extensive study of the same with a resume of the book accompanied by posters to be given at church service after the study is completed.

Woodbury Society.

Woodbury Missionary society met Monday. A spiritual note was sounded in the opening song, "I Need Thee Every Hour." The Bible lesson was given by Mrs. E. W. Williams. "Fagots for Missionary Fires in Mexico and in Woodbury" was given by 22 ladies. The afternoon program was in charge of Mrs. John Jones. Mrs. Jackson and Miss Frances Callahan gave interesting talks on Mexico. Mrs. Callahan presented Stewardship, and Mrs. Sutton gave a reading, "Let Your Eyes Be on the Field Today." Miss Lila Jones, of Atlanta, gave an interesting reading on "Elizabeth Grant's Call." All reports were good. The juniors, under direction of Miss Mae Chunn and Miss Sara Baker, are studying "Better Americans" and are making posters and animal books for the Japanese children. Closing song, "A Call to Christian Workers," composed by the president, was an earnest appeal to every one present.

Park Street Missionary Society.

The W. M. S. of Park Street church met at the church on Monday, August 29. Mrs. D. M. Therrell in the chair. The program was in charge of the junior missionary society and it was most instructive and helpful. Opening song, "America, the Beautiful," was followed by a talk by Carol Black on "Justice." She used a poster made by Corinne Medlock, which was an exceptionally creditable piece of work. The 121st Psalm was recited in concert by the children. Corinne Medlock and Otis Skinner gave a vocal duet. Mary Charles Berry gave a missionary story and James Griffin gave a patriotic reading, followed by an instrumental solo by Carol Black. Plans for the mission school at Emory, September 19 to 23, were discussed. Agnes Shoemake, the child whom the society is sending to Vashti, was introduced. Delegates were elected to the district meeting at St. John's church, September 29, Mrs. DuPont Murphy and Mrs. B. R. Stallings being selected to serve in that capacity. Mrs. J. C. White, district secretary of South Atlanta district, was present and dismissed the meeting with a prayer.

Pattillo Memorial.

The Woman's Missionary society of the Pattillo Memorial Methodist church held its social and literary meeting at the church on Thursday.

Mrs. H. D. Haralson, chairman of Circle No. 3, presided. The interesting program was prepared by Mrs. M. E. Hill.

After the opening song, the devotional from Zechariah, "Recovering a Lost Ideal," was conducted by Mrs. Hill.

The topic for the meeting was Mexico. Those taking part were Mrs. Van Winkle, who spoke on the "Early History of Mexico;" Mrs. L. D. Jolly, who discussed the "Mexico of Today;" Mrs. C. M. Campbell, who gave the imaginary experience of a "Would-Be Missionary," and Mrs. H. D. Haralson, who chose for her topic, "America First."

Mrs. L. D. Smith sang "The Rosary" with sacred words.

Rev. W. M. Twiggs gave a short talk on the needs of a new church.

Stained Glass Altar Window Appears in Christian Church.

Mrs. John Kerksis, Christian church editor of Federated Church Women, contributes the following article to the page:

"Upon entering the new Peachtree Christian church, so rapidly rising to completion at the corner of Peachtree and Spring, the first thing that will greet the eye will be a beautiful stained glass window above the altar. It is the subject treated therein that is unique in the realm of art, that of Christ as he gave the great commission when he said: 'All authority in heaven and earth I give unto thee.' Dr. L. O. Bricker, the minister, in conjunction, or rather collaboration, with Augustus Tack, the famous artist, has completed a design which no artist ever conceived or carried out before. The window is being built in England and will indeed be a thing of beauty and a joy forever and ever. The children of the church are giving this window by means of 'strips of dimes.' Each strip contains 16 dimes and is equivalent to each inch the child measures. Several generous 'in memoriam' amounts have been given by parents whose children are living jewels in the Master's kingdom. Of course other handsome memorial windows will be erected later on, but this window, given as it is, and being of the nature it is, will stand out through the ages as a new contribution to the furtherance of the Gospel—a silent gospel in this instance—and the saving of souls. For, as Shakespeare truly said, there are 'sermons in everything,' and very potent ones in the world of art and music. For 'the world is so full of a number of things' that conspire together to worship the Lord in beauty and silence as well as the many other ways which we who love Him know."

Koo-Koo Klub Holds Meeting.

A business meeting of the Koo-Koo klub was held with Mrs. B. M. Whiteley at her home in Kirkwood. At this time Mrs. J. C. Emmert, of East Lake, was elected president.

Those present were: Mesdames J. C. Emmert, C. A. Dukes, B. M. Whiteley, J. R. Russell, Robert Gaston, H. L. Wooten, M. D. Williams, Miss Cora Byrom and Mrs. Brittingham.

The next meeting will be held Tuesday, September 20, with Mrs. J. R. Russell on East Lake Drive.

Missionary Union Adds to Success of Blue Ridge Meet

In the recent Baptist assembly, held at Blue Ridge, Ga., the Woman's Missionary Union of Georgia was a distinct factor in the interest and success of the assembly. Representing the W. M. U., S. B. C., Mrs. Carter Wright, of Roanoke, Ala., taught a large class of women, using the book, "The Larger Stewardship." Mrs. W. J. Neel, president Georgia W. M. U., taught on equally interested class, using one of the latest recommended mission study books, "A Straight Way Toward Tomorrow."

Miss Julia Allen, with Edward Preston and Miss Mary Frances Johnson, provided for the recreation of the guests, affording hiking, games, singing and other forms of amusement. Two evenings were under the auspices of W. M. U. Sunday evening Miss Clara Nolan brought an instructive and inspirational message on Easter in Palestine. She entertained a large congregation of assembly visitors and Blue Ridge citizens by giving a costume review of the 12 foreign countries which she had visited. The processional of young people, dressed in the costumes that were made in these countries, singing "We Are Marching to Zion," was impressive.

Mrs. Ben S. Thompson, Madison, chairman for Georgia for the ruby anniversary of W. M. U. (southern Baptist convention), was present at the Blue Ridge assembly and gave first-hand information concerning the plans and progress of Georgia's part in the fortieth anniversary of the organization.

Mrs. Thompson's mother, Mrs. Newton, also of Madison, Georgia's W. M. U. chairman of the "Intercessary League of Shut-ins," was another prominent guest at Blue Ridge. Baptist women are requested to begin now to make a list of praying shut-ins who will gladly welcome this opportunity for definite service.

Baptist Missionary Union Holds Mission Study Institute

The Georgia Baptist Woman's Missionary Union announces a state-wide mission study institute to be held at the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church, September 14, 15, 16.

This is a new project in the department of mission study and promises to be far-reaching in its splendid results. It is expected that mission study leaders from all parts of the state will avail themselves of this opportunity to become acquainted with the latest and most effective methods of conducting classes in all W. M. U. grades.

The Piedmont hotel has been designated as institute headquarters.

The entire program is under the direction of Mrs. Taul White, of Rome, mission study chairman of the Georgia Baptist B. W. M. U., and provides practical solutions for many of the problems that arise in connection with the study of missions. Sessions open at 9:30 o'clock with a workshop period, led by an Atlanta pastor or by a missionary.

At 10 o'clock each day conferences will be conducted by Mrs. White covering the following topics: How mission study class work may be improved; steps in the training of mission study teachers and leaders; the church school of missions; mission study and our young people reading courses in the local church and association; the advanced mission study course; the greatest mission study problem in our state.

From 10:30 to 11:30 o'clock four classes will meet simultaneously. For W. M. S. and Y. W. A., Mrs. White will teach, as a model class demonstrating methods, "The Story of Missions," by Edward White. How to teach missions of Intermediate G. A.'s and R. A.'s will be the topic of study for the class taught by Mrs. A. F. McMahon. Mrs. E. M. Bailey, of Acworth, will teach "The Missionary Education of Juniors." Miss Julia Allen will conduct a class for Sunbeam leaders in story telling, projects, handwork, sand tables.

Mrs. Una Roberts, Lawrence, mission study editor of the home mission board, will teach "The Upward Christ," "How to Teach Missions to Intermediates," and her own book, "Just Around the Corner Tales." These classes will be held at a time when the entire institute may assemble and observe Mrs. Lawrence's teaching methods.

Each morning at 11:30 o'clock Mrs. James D. Rhodes will teach a model class, using the book, "On Earth Peace. Sessions will close at 4 o'clock. There will be no evening meetings.

Lunch will be served at 1 o'clock by the ladies of the Ponce de Leon church at 50 cents per plate.

Presidents' Luncheon.

The presidents' luncheon, a yearly feature of Baptist Woman's Missionary work, took place at the Second Baptist church August 23. In the absence of Mrs. Hal Hentz, president of the Second Church W. M. S., Mrs. E. L. Connelly, mother of Mrs. Hentz, presided. Mrs. Frances Brown Chase, president emerita of the society, shared honors with Mrs. Connelly. Mrs. Ben S. Thompson, chairman of ruby anniversary for Georgia, outlined the goal which this organization should attain this year. Mrs. Wilbur M. Jones, superintendent, reported 16 new societies organized as a beginning toward the slogan, "A Woman's Missionary Society in Every Church."

There were 75 representative women present at the luncheon, with Mrs. J. R. Dickey, chairman; Mrs. Frances Brown Chase and Mrs. A. S. Oakes. The arrangements were made by Mrs. J. W. Awtrey, luncheon chairman; Mrs. Thomas Jeffries and Mrs. James Kempton assisting.

Linen Shower.

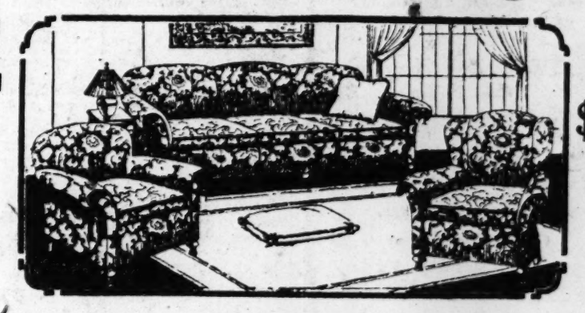

Mrs. George Westmoreland, president of the board of trustees, Georgia Baptist Orphans' home, Hapeville, extends an invitation through the Woman's Missionary Union of Atlanta association, to a linen shower on Thursday afternoon, September 22, from 2 to 5 o'clock. The guests will be received in the purser lobby of the main building. Hapeville cars pass the gate of the institution and churchwomen are invited to be present.

'Do Everything Policy' Featured At 53rd National Convention

BY M. FRANCES MEADORS BURGHARD.

Although the press of the entire country carried innumerable reports of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union convention, which was held in Minneapolis last week, the returning delegates quote the royal Sheba's famous words in their verbal reports, "The half has not been told," of this, "the greatest of the fifty-third annual conventions." A feature of decided importance is the regular departmental activities which carry out the "do everything policy" of the organization about which the national directors gave the year's high points.

These departments are Americanization, anti-narcotics, child welfare, Christian citizenship, economics of prohibition, evangelistic, exhibits and fairs, flower mission and relief work, health institutes, legislation, medal contests, medical temperance, motion pictures, parliamentary usage, peace and arbitration, prison reform, scientific temperance investigation, scientific temperance instruction, social morality, soldiers and sailors, Sunday school, temperance and missions, temperance teaching in daily vacation Bible and religious schools and their subdivisions.

Peace and Arbitration.

"The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was from the beginning a peace organization and the pioneer of women's organizations in so declaring," said Mrs. Lelia A. Dillard, of Emory university, in a summary address at the convention as national director of the peace and arbitration department. "Its main object has been to outlaw the liquor traffic, and that will be the object until we have world prohibition, because there can be no peace as long as this most powerful peace destroyer exists," she continued. "So our policy is the promotion of an abiding peace, established by righting existing wrongs and founded on justice to all tempered with the mercy that comes from our endeavor to make effective the Golden Rule.

"The W. C. T. U. has been a peacemaker because of its interdenominational character, members working together, disregarding differences of Scripture interpretations and thinking of themselves as comrades in a great cause. It has been interracial, no race under the sun being excluded from membership, provided the conditions of membership are met—that is, signing the pledge and paying dues and making the effort 'to establish the Golden Rule of Christ in custom and in law.' It has been international as well. A better acquaintance with the peoples of other nations brings the 'better understanding' that creates good will. Our World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union presents to us sisterhood in the concrete. We think of nations in terms of leaders in the temperance reform.

Nearly 40 Years.

"The National W. C. T. U. has had a special peace department since 1868. All through the years since that time the thought of the settlement of international difficulties by arbitration has been before the minds of its members. A present we have thirty-nine state organizations with state directors. In two states the department operates from state headquarters. Our young people's branch includes one peace program each year. The children of the Loyal Temperance Legion have a program observing Good Will Day.

"Through the department of peace and arbitration during the last fiscal year there were 279 oratorical contests using peace as their subjects; 164 essay contests; programs at 718 regular meetings, and 380 public meetings where international relations were discussed, and hundreds of articles inserted in newspapers by our workers and thousands of leaflets distributed. No doubt the figures this year will be far in advance of those of last. Peace means cooperation. For two years we have been a part of the Washington conference on the cause and cure of war, called by nine great organizations of women. This conference in 1927 adopted a course of study which our department uses in order to better comprehend the problems involved in bringing peace among nations. "So we have moved forward and upward in the path of peace—a path that does not lead to acquaintance in whatever is but to downright opposition to wrong, holding as its goal eternal right."

Delegates to Convention.

Among the 200 delegates from the United States W. C. T. U. chosen to attend the thirteenth triennial convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to be held in Lausanne, Switzerland, July 27 to August 2, 1928, are six from Georgia—Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, Tate; Mrs. Marvin Williams, Mrs. N. C. McPherson, Atlanta; Mrs. Florence Ewell Atkins, Mrs. W. T. Garrard, Milledgeville, and Mrs. D. A. Warlick, Macon. Anyone desiring to make the trip with Mrs. Armor, and also visit various points of interest in Europe would do well to communicate with her. A number of friends have already signified their intention of making this wonderful trip with her.

One of the original crusaders attending the convention, Mrs. M. A. Davis, Delaware, Ohio, is still active, though 86 years old. To commemorate her birthday she presented the W. C. T. U., the greatest organization in the world to her, with 86 new members. Ever since she was 80 years old Mrs. Davis has won as many members as she was years old as a yearly tribute to the cause. Before she was 80 years old—well, no one knows just how many members she gained, for she was a temperance worker even before she was a crusader, "when long ago, in the snow and the sleet, womanhood knelt in the pitiless street." Her zeal and resultant efforts serve as an example worthy of many emulators.

Officers Reelected.

The national officers were reelected, except the corresponding secretary, who announced her retiment after a service of "19 beautiful years" before the election. She was succeeded by Mrs. Anna Marden DeYo, of San Francisco. Officers are Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Brooklyn, N. Y., president; Mrs. Ida B. Wise-Smith, Des Moines, Iowa, vice president at large; Mrs. Sara N. Hoge, Lincoln, Va., recording secretary; Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, Springfield, Mo., assistant recording secretary; Mrs. Anna Marsden DeYo, San Francisco, Calif., corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, Evanston, Ill., treasurer.

Meets in Boston.

Invitations to entertain the next convention were received from numerous church, civic, educational, patriotic and philanthropic organizations and city officials in Indianapolis, Kansas City and Boston. Kansas City, the only city to have a municipal hostess, sent her, Mrs. Herbert Grissom, to add the city's invitation to that extended through the W. C. T. U. delegates from Missouri. The invitation to meet in Boston, Mass., was accepted for 1928.

Promptness Urged.

The W. C. T. U. is organized to "do good according to a plan." A part of the plan is to make local, county, district, state and national reports of all work through the officers and departmental directors. September is the time for all reports to be sent to state officers and directors. Report blanks have been or soon will be sent to every union. They should be filled and returned to the senders as early as possible for compilation. In making full and complete reports "the everlastin' team work of every bloomin' soul" is necessary. The state directors urge promptness, as the W. C. T. U. year ends the last day of this month. Preparations for the state convention in Savannah are going forward, and the program will be announced soon. Every union is expected to send delegates, and as many as desire may attend as visitors.

Beautiful Bride of Past Week

Mrs. Thomas K. Glenn, who before her marriage on Friday to Thomas K. Glenn, of Atlanta, was Mrs. Elizabeth Woodhouse, of Detroit.

Board of Directors Of Y. W. To Meet Monday, Sept. 12

The regular monthly meeting of the board of directors of the Y. W. C. A. will be held at the association headquarters, 37 Auburn avenue, Monday, September 12, at 10 o'clock.

Miss Aileen Paul, secretary for business girls, has arrived and is anxious to become acquainted with all the girls of the clubs and all others who are interested in club work.

The Bright Light club left for Camp Highland Saturday for the week-end. There will be special camp fire programs besides hikes.

The Girl Reserves are making plans for the beginning of winter activities. Many of them are back from Camp Highland and many of them are back from vacations out of the city. Thursday the president of the High school groups, Fulton, Decatur and the Amicus club groups met to make plans for the coming season.

Just as soon as the organization of school is over the Junior High school Girl Reserves will begin activities at the Y. W. C. A. building. The Girl Reserve office is located on the third floor of the Y. W. C. A., 37 Auburn avenue.

Constitution Week To Be Observed.

The week beginning September 17, will be observed as "Constitution Week," that date one hundred and forty years ago marking the completion and signing of one of the greatest documents in history—the Constitution of the United States of America.

This anniversary is annually observed in some fitting manner by the Daughters of the American Revolution, and in a message today from the president general, Mrs. Alfred J. Brosseau, she urges the importance of celebrating this significent date in our history.

Atlanta Chapter D.A.R. To Meet September 15

Judge H. Warner Hi.., gifted speaker and justice of the supreme court, will be the orator addressing the members of the Atlanta chapter, D. A. R., on "The Constitution and International Relations" at the meeting Thursday afternoon, September 15, at 3 o'clock. Mrs. J. W. Smith, regent, will preside.

This will be a most important meeting and of genuine interest to every member. Constitution day, September 15, will be observed, reports from officers will be submitted and a delightful program presented. Miss Mary Inman Pearce, talented pianist, and Miss Mary Louise Brumby, with her charming voice, will entertain with selections of music which will be one of the most enjoyable features of the meeting. All visiting D. A. R. in the city are cordially invited.

William Heider Is Host at Luncheon.

William Heider was host at an informal luncheon Saturday at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel, following his marriage to Miss Martha Lepine, which was a lovely event taking place earlier in the morning.

Luncheon was served at 1:30 o'clock in one of the private dining rooms of the hotel. Gracing the center of the lovely luncheon table was a French basket filled with a variety of pastel shaded summer flowers.

Covers were placed for a few close friends of the bride and groom.

Following luncheon Mr. Heider and his bride left for a wedding trip to Niagara Falls and other points east, after which they will make their home in Atlanta.

Constitution Day To Be Observed.

September 17 is "Constitution Day," this date being the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the signing of this great document.

Its observance should be in great measure intrusted to the Daughters of the American Revolution, the strongest organization of patriotic women in the United States.

Local, state and national patriotism should urge every D. A. R. to observe it so markedly that it will impel every one in her respective community to study the constitution with utmost interest. The enthusiasm of school, press and pulpit should be aroused to teach intelligently the provisions of this great document, the Constitution of the United States of America, of which we are the fortunate heirs by inalienable right.

MAMIE and the LION'S DEN

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

By ELIZABETH JORDAN

She Was Reared on the Precept That "Men Are Ragin' Lions"—So Naturally She did Not Run to Meet Them With a Smile.

"Am I never to be any more to you," he asked in a trembling voice, "than I am now?"

MAMIE WRIGHT'S horror of the lion's den dated back to the time when she was ten. At that period of Mamie's career her mother, Mrs. Wright, had a maiden of all work whose name was Praise-ever Perkins, and whose forty severe New England winters might reasonably have been counted on to chill any tender shoots of romance in Praise-ever's nature. However, they had not done so, for when Mrs. Wright engaged a "hired man" of fifty, whose name was Silas Clapp, and who had all his evenings on his hands, Praise-ever promptly succumbed to Silas' sex appeal as it regularly reached her after supper from the other side of the kitchen stove.

Their courtship was so brisk and brief an affair that Mamie, who spent most of her evenings in the kitchen interestedly observing it, felt unduly deprived when it ended in marriage. Certain stormy scenes during the honeymoon comforted her, but even these were all too short. In exactly seven months from the date of his wedding Silas Clapp tied up in a compact bundle his earthly possessions, consisting of his Sunday suit, his extra shirt, a silk handkerchief and a bottle of liniment warranted to be equally good for man and beast, and departed from the Wright homestead. He never came back; and after a few weeks of watchful waiting Praise-ever realized that he never would. So she relegated to a corner the heavy flat-iron and the long-handled poker she had kept at hand in readiness for a wifely welcome, and she then started a special course on WHAT MEN ARE, with Silas Clapp as its most horrible example and with little Mamie Wright as her sole student.

"Ragin' lions, that's what they are," Praise-ever assured the interested pupil, "roamin' through this vale of tears, seekin' what they may devour. Don't you have nothin' to do with 'em, Mamie. They can roar gentle as the suckin' dove when they have a mind to. The Bible says so, and the Bible's right, for Silas Clapp done that very thing in this here kitchen. But look out for them most when they roar gentle, for that's the time they're gettin' ready to deevour."

"My daddy wasn't like that," Mamie murmured, recalling vague memories of a manly figure associated in her extreme infancy with new shoes and Christmas trees.

"I ain't saying nothin' about your father," Praise-ever remarked through tight pressed lips. "He's been in his grave these five years. And whatever he done," she darkly added, "is buried with him. What I'm tellin' you is to look out for them that's still alive. I got to warn you, poor child, for the Lord knows your ma's too busy to do it."

Mamie nodded. She had long since learned that her mother was too busy to do much for her. Possibly this was because Mrs. Wright was fully aware that Praise-ever was never too busy to do anything Mamie wanted done. Mrs. Wright looked after the needs of her community, and Praise-ever looked after the needs of Mamie. To all three it seemed a fair arrangement. Mrs. Wright spent her time at the local Woman's club and the local hospital board and the local Old Folks' home and the local church and the local Ladies' Aid society; and Mamie went to school and spent the intervals between school and bed in the kitchen with Praise-ever, or playing in the back yard under Praise-ever's watchful eyes.

Many women came to the Wright house, but no men came except the delivery lads who left supplies at the back door and then fled before the storm cloud of Praise-ever's disapproval. There was nothing to temper in Mamie's impressionable young mind the creed Praise-ever continued to preach. She looked upon the delivery lads with horror, believing with Praise-ever that they were limbs of Satan and sinks of iniquity. Her hours with the small boys in her class at school did little to correct this impression, which she suspected that the teacher shared. To Praise-ever, and therefore to Mamie, the men of the nearby town were whited sepulchers, and both had the darkest doubts about the two or three men teachers in Mamie's school, and even about the principal; though the latter's little girl, who was a classmate and friend of Mamie, frequently spoke well of him.

Mamie's mother died from overwork when Mamie was fourteen. None of Mrs. Wright's exhaustion was the result of any work she had done for Mamie, but she left her only child enough money to take a four years' course at a good school, and to follow this with a special course in secretarial work in a big city, which course, she assumed, would later assure Mamie a fair livelihood. She left in her will full instructions concerning these matters, and as she had given them the same clear thought she turned on civic problems, her plans were excellent and worked out admirably. At twenty Mamie had graduated from school, had gone to the nearest big city, had taken a two-year training in secretarial work, and had become secretary to the president of a big corporation. Praise-ever Clapp could not go to school with Mamie, but she had gone with her to the big city to see that she wore flannels in winter time, and rubbers when it rained, and was properly nourished, and, most of all, that she was protected from roaring lions.

"Two c'n live as cheap as one," Praise-ever had ruled when the matter of Mamie's training came up. "If you went to one of them boarding houses you'd be payin' some landlady a whole lot of money and gettin' mighty little for it. You and me will have a flat of three-four rooms, and I'll take care of it and do the cookin'. All you'll have to pay for will be rent and light and what we eat. You won't have to give me no wages, for I been workin' and savin' all my life. But we'll both have a real home, for you're the nearest to a child I ever had; and though I ain't sayin' nothin' against your ma, I guess I'm the nearest to a mother you ever had."

"O, Praise-ever?" Mamie had cried, "will you really come?"

"Try to keep me away an' see how it works," Praise-ever grimly invited. "If you thought I was agoin' to let you gad off into the wilderness without no one to look after you, an' put your pretty little head right into a lion's mouth, you know better now."

The years had not dulled Praise-ever's suspicions of Man. Indeed, while Mamie was at school and taking her training, these had increased with every season. She hoarded all the harrowing tales she read in the newspapers, and all the gossip she heard, and passed on the accumulation to her pupil.

"You're old enough now to know what's goin' on around you," was her favorite slogan. "Lots of girls gets into trouble because they ain't been warned. If anything ever happens to you, it won't be owin' to that!"

It wouldn't be. Even Mamie began to feel that the course in What Men Are was almost too exhaustive.

"Aren't any men ever nice at any time?" she had timidly asked Praise-ever at fifteen.

Mamie and the Lion's Den

"Not unless they're tryin' to git somethin' out of you," Praise-ever assured her. "Then they can be nice enough. When they're bein' nice it's the time to watch them closest."

Occasional doubts of the correctness of this viewpoint assailed Mamie, as on one occasion when Praise-ever threw the water in a dish pan over a lad of fifteen who had come to the back door to learn on behalf of the school club whether Mamie would take a small part in a Christmas play.

"Play actin', is it!" Praise-ever exclaimed. "We know what that leads to—and they'll be none of it in this family!" And because the lad lingered to explain the matter more fully, she dimmed the beauty of his new suit. Even Mamie, loyal to Praise-ever though she was, had felt that this was going too far, and the lad had been sure it was and the next day, at recess, had given Mamie his complete impressions of the incident.

"My ma says that hired girl of yours is queer," he ended. "My ma says she's gettin' queerer because Si Clapp left her in the lurch."

That, of course, ended Mamie's sympathy for him. She was sorry now there hadn't been more water in the dish pan.

The school her mother had chosen was an excellent one, noted for the strictness of its discipline. Mrs. Wright had seen to that. The pupils—between fourteen and eighteen—were assumed to need little outside diversion and practically no masculine society. Mamie's summers were spent with Praise-ever. But occasionally a clear bugle call came to her over the hills of youth, and it was at such times that she wondered if all boys and young men were roaring lions. Middle aged men and old men were, of course. But perhaps boys of her own age were sometimes different. Two years of training in the big city also modified her views.

"There's one thing I must insists on, Praise-ever darling," she ruled when the matter of the new job came up. "If you're going to keep on living with me and helping me in my career, you must call me Mary, not Mamie. Think of calling Henry Van Alt's new secretary 'Mamie'!"

"All right, Mamie—no, Mary," Praise-ever humbly agreed. (Her young mistress was "Mamie—no, Mary," to Praise-ever from that hour.) "But you're sure Mr. Van Alt is an old man, ain't you?"

"I should say so. He's sixty-two," Mamie testified, "and he has a wife and four grownup children and six grandchildren.

"That wouldn't save you if he got his Eye on you," Praise-ever darkly prophesied.

"Well, he hasn't," Mamie crisply told her. "And there's another thing, too. You must stop warning me about men all the time. I know all about them," the novice added, "and I won't forget it. But I know how to take care of myself, too, so I don't want to hear any more warnings. And if you could get over starting and looking scared every time I mention the name of some man in the office," she added yearningly, "I'd be awfully glad, Praise-ever darling."

"I'll try, Mamie—no, Mary," Praise-ever promised. She would have promised anything when she was called "darling." No one had ever called Praise-ever darling before, not even Silas when he was roaring as gentle as a sucking dove.

Mamie made a big success of the new job, Van Alt's manager, John Stebbins, asked by his chief for an intimate report on the impression Miss Mary Wright was making on the office staff, put it into one sentence.

"She's very efficient—and she has the most perfect office manner of any woman we've ever had in the place."

If he had merely testified that Miss Wright was working ten hours a day, as indeed she was, the statement might have left Henry Van Alt cold. He rather expected that sort of thing from an efficient secretary. But his interest was caught by the new tribute.

"Eh?" he alertly exclaimed. "What d'ye mean by that?"

"Her office manner is perfect," Stebbins repeated. "There isn't a bit of nonsense about it. She isn't priggish, either, and she hasn't taken on the hard metallic manner that so many office women today wear like a suit of armor because they think it's businesslike."

"You seem to be an authority on the manner of women in offices," Van Alt dryly commented.

"I am," his manager admitted. "God knows I've had enough chance to study it," he added with a sigh. "Most women either gush or giggle in their desire to be friendly, or they're so icily matter of fact that they repel one. Miss Wright is always pleasant; she's balanced and has a sense of humor. In other words, she's human; but she's absolutely businesslike, and it would take a brave man to introduce the personal element into a business talk with her.

"Ever tried it?" Van Alt inquired with a cheerful grin. Van Alt, despite his children and grandchildren, was a care free man of the world who enjoyed life and was convinced that he didn't look a day over fifty.

"I have not," Stebbins curtly testified. "As you know, I don't do any philandering in this office."

Van Alt nodded. He also flushed. He himself did very little "philandering" in business hours, but once or twice he had skidded, and Stebbins knew he had. He changed the subject, but the conversation did not pass from his mind and he recalled it later.

"The family's out of town over this week-end," he told Mamie one Saturday, "but I've got to stay in town and spend tomorrow morning in a dentist's chair. How about going out to dinner with me tonight to cheer me up? We might go to a musical comedy afterwards."

"No, thank you," said Mamie, wondering if this was the Beginning.

It wasn't. Van Alt, who had told her the exact truth, and had given the invitation out of sheer boredom at the prospect before him, was infuriated by the remoteness of her manner.

"The little idiot thinks I'm starting something," he told himself, and for the next fortnight he confined his association with Miss Wright to curt orders. Then he forgave her, for she really was an excellent secretary; but he never gave her another invitation.

Miss Wright gained steadily in popularity during the next five months. Then the Gay Lothario of the firm—there is usually at least one in every big office, and he is often the least dangerous man there—came to her desk and tried on her one of his pet openings.

"There's something awfully restful about you," he said in a deep voice. He did not know that he was part of a little duet and that down through the years Praise-ever's warning was reaching Miss Wright at the same moment: "When they're bein' nice it's the time to watch 'em closest." She smiled at the memory, and the Gay Lothario, whose name was Morris, was encouraged.

"It's like visiting a dim, quiet cathedral," he went on, "when there are only a few people around."

"It's exactly like it," Miss Wright briskly confirmed. "There are two just behind you, waiting to speak to me."

It took some time and considerable snubbing to discourage Morris, whose faith in his own charm was deep. But she did it at last, and because he was at heart a good sort he ended by really giving her the admiration and respect he had merely professed at first. With the exception of his tentative advances, which ceased as soon as Morris realized that Miss Wright was "a fine girl with no nonsense about her," no man in the office sounded the note of sentiment in Mamie's presence for six months.

Though she would never have admitted it—for she now prided herself on being a woman of the world—and though she thought she had about cast away Praise-ever's creed, the fact surprised her. She knew she was attractive. She was in daily association with men of all ages and types. Surely there must be some raging lions among them; yet she had seen none and the confidences of her girl friends among the employees held no suggestion that they had lions in their lives. What disturbed them was lack of appreciation of their services, or failure to raise their salaries, or impositions in the matter of overtime, or similar business troubles of their working hours. If lions were roaring about them, they apparently didn't know it.

In the seventh month, however, a lion really roared. It was a meek roar, so soft that Mamie hardly heard it; and it was voiced by the head of the publicity department, a man whose work brought him daily to her desk with material to be passed on to Mr. Van Alt. He was a mild mannered little man with fair hair, a small, blonde mustache, a bald spot, and faded blue eyes.

"Am I never to be any more to you," he asked Mamie in a trembling voice, "than I am now?"

Mamie stared at him. Her surprise was what the teacher's would have been if Mary's little lamb had paused in its gambols about the schoolroom to utter such a remark.

"What do you mean?" she asked amazedly.

"I mean," the little man willingly explained, "that I love you."

Mamie leaned forward in her desk chair and looked into his pale blue eyes, which were on a level with hers as he sat beside her. They were alone in Van Alt's private office, and for a moment she felt like the child of ten years ago drinking in Praise-ever's indictment of men. So it was true, then! Praise-ever must be at least partly in the right. Even this mild mannered little sheep had suddenly become a lion. If he had it in him to do so, all the others must have it in them. Then Mamie's common sense and the influence of her later thought and training asserted themselves.

"How dare you!" she demanded. "How dare you speak to me like that when you have a wife and child! You love them, too. You know you do," she added in a milder tone. "Why, only last month I helped you to select a birthday present for your wife!"

After that it was all over except the abject apologies of the lion, now suddenly a lamb. He was most awfully sorry, he humbly assured her; he didn't know what had got into him; guessed he was a bit off his head; hadn't been sleeping well lately; wouldn't have insulted her for the world; respected her as he did his mother—or his wife; merely a brainstorm; she must forgive him and he'd promise on his honor never to offend again. She forgave him, and for an illuminating moment, young as she was, she was given the vision to see in this poor human sheep's futile gesture the pathos as well as the absurdity of his frantic clutch at a bit of romance in a colorless life.

Nevertheless, the incident left an unpleasant impression, which she would undoubtedly have soon forgotten save for Praise-ever's repeated questioning. For Praise-ever frequently ignored the taboo her young mistress had placed on the matter of lions, and one of these instances occurred within a day or two after the episode of the sheep.

"Has any of them men been worryin' you?" Praise-ever wanted to know. Up till now Mamie had answered this question with a robust negative, and had followed the answer by repeating her caution to Praise-ever. But this time Mamie flushed, and Praise-ever saw the flush.

"Now, now, Mamie—no, Mary," she crooned, "jest you tell Praise-ever all about it."

Mamie was not a good dissembler. She had to confess the existence of one mangy little lion. At the end of her recital Praise-ever ejaculated a long drawn and triumphant "H-a-h-h!" As an authority and a prophet she was vindicated. Mamie reflected that the foolish episode was almost worth while because of the satisfaction it gave Praise-ever.

She had been sturdily reminding herself that a record of only two such episodes in seven months—one with a sheep, the other with a Gay Lothario, and both equally harmless—in a firm where she talked to dozens of men every day was a pretty good one for her masculine associates. And even as she gave herself these reminders she was becoming slightly uneasy over the actions of a third man. As this man, Warren Kingsbury, proved to be the real lion in Mamie's business jungle, and as he evidently led her into his den, the gentle reader will perhaps accept a description of the episode given in detail.

To begin, he was quite different from the small offenders. He was a middle-aged man of fine physique and a really distinguished appearance. He had a noble head and a handsome, sensitive face with a rather sad, shuttered look about it. He also had an excellent reputation among the workers in the office. Mamie had heard only good things of him. He was kind and considerate to the girls in his department, and he was courteous to all his associates. He was a hard-working and successful executive. He lived in the suburbs of the big city, in a house that had a rather well-known garden around it; and Mamie understood that he and his wife put in all their spare time in this garden. They had bird houses and bird baths, and a feeding station which Kingsbury once told Mamie they kept filled all winter.

"The result is that our bird houses are never empty," he went on. "We feed the birds that are left in winter, and we feed the others when they're flying over every spring and autumn; and they remember us and come back to live with us. We have robins and wrens and orioles and scarlet tanagers and humming birds and blue jays and martins and a lot of others, not to speak of a lonely old hermit thrush that lives all by himself down among the trees at the foot of our vegetable garden. The birds used to be a wonderful interest to my wife."

Mamie liked his frequent refer-

What Has Happened to Justice?

Sensational Killing of McSwiggin in Chicago Is Unavenged—Machine Gun Used in Underworld Feud

IT IS fifteen months and more since young William H. McSwiggin, brilliant ace of the state's attorneys' staff in Chicago, fell dead in a volley of machine-gun bullets, a victim, probably just a chance victim, of the bloodthirsty warfare between contending criminal bands in the City of Murders.

It is fifteen months and—something has happened to justice.

No one has been punished for the machine-gunning of McSwiggin. No one, from all appearances, ever will be punished. Justice apparently must be satisfied with that old excuse, insufficient evidence, in the McSwiggin case. If the murderer dies it will more likely be at the hands of one of his own kind than at the hands of a hangman.

McSwiggin's death drew the whole nation's attention to what has been described as the most extraordinary crime situation that ever existed in an American city. It forced the spotlight on a warfare that for years had made Cook county its battlefield and strewn hundreds of bodies through the streets and alleys of Chicago.

* * * *

The McSwiggin killing grew out of the rivalry between Cook county beer barons and vice lords. It is believed that his death was not intentional. The young prosecutor merely happened to get in the line of fire during an important assassination.

The important assassination in question was the extermination of several members of the enterprising O'Donnell gang. This gang had been invading Cicero, that exceedingly tough suburb of Chicago, and as a result had been eating into profits of Scarface Al Capone, overlord of Cicero.

Capone, bland, suave, fastidious in attire, had been brought to Chicago from New York by John Torrio, henchman of Big Jim Colosimo, cruel underworld leader. Capone had distinguished himself as a member of the notorious Five Points gang in New York. Colosimo, who had made a fortune in white slavery, had been bothered by blackmailers and he wanted them silenced. They were silenced.

But presently Big Jim, too, was silenced. He was found one day in the doorway of his restaurant perforated by five bullets, with fifty thousand dollar bills in his pocket and a fortune in diamonds on his person. The underworld never told who killed him but there were plenty of theories, for Colosimo had a world of enemies.

Scarface Al was grilled, among others, but the evidence was never strong enough to link Capone and Torrio to the murder.

Scarface Al Capone

However, upon the death of Big Jim, his first lieutenant, Torrio became vice lord of the south side levee and Capone became his chief henchman. Then Torrio retired into the background and Capone became the active head of the combination. They made vice and liquor a profitable business.

Brought Three Brothers.

Capone, when he came to Chicago, brought his three brothers, Ralph, Frank and Vincenzo. Frank was killed in election riots in Cicero, which his brother was later to dominate, on April 1, 1924, and his funeral was the most lavish ever accorded a gunman. He was buried in a $5,000 casket and $10,000 worth of flowers went with the body to the grave.

That funeral illustrates how Scarface Al did things.

Capone practically took possession of Cicero by force when things tightened up on the south side. It is said that he and Torrio during some eighteen months of unmolested operations cleaned up $3,000,000 in liquor, gambling and prostitution.

So rich a field was Cicero, indeed, that rival organizations before long sought to compete with Capone. Chief among these were the O'Donnells and their associates—Klondike, Miles and Barney O'Donnell, Jim Doherty, Eddie Tancl, Tom Duffy and others. The O'Donnells began a no-quarter war with Capone and Torrio in 1924 and more than fifteen were killed before Capone was forced to share part of the profits with the invaders.

But he was by no means satisfied with this arrangement. He resolved to wipe out the entire O'Donnell band.

And for his coup he chose that most effective and up-to-date weapon of warfare—the machine-gun.

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon of April 27, 1926, four members of the O'Donnell gang—Jimmy Doherty, Tom Duffy, Klondike and Miles O'Donnell—set out for Cicero in Klondike's big sedan. They had worked strenuously in the April 13 primary election in behalf of State's Attorney Robert Crowe, and had been busy downtown in the election commissioner's office, helping in the recount of ballots demanded by U. S. Senator Charles S. Deneen.

Some Excellent Beer.

As they started out they informed friends that they were going to Cicero to drink some excellent beer they had themselves delivered the previous evening.

The word was flashed to Cicero and there the O'Donnell enemies went into action. Five automobiles were arranged in battle formation, with the murder car in the middle containing a Thompson machine-gun, a weapon capable of discharging 100 bullets in four seconds. The cars were so placed that traffic might be blocked in any direction.

The O'Donnells and their two associates went west from the center of the city and stopped at 4944 West Washington boulevard, the home of Assistant State's Attorney William H. McSwiggin. From all accounts the conspirators never knew that McSwiggin was in the car when it reached Cicero.

Now a word about McSwiggin:

He was a product of the west side and the son of a policeman, as were his friends Doherty and Duffy. He had been a lifelong friend, too, of the O'Donnells, though instead of turning to banditry and beer-running he had studied law and distinguished himself in the state's attorney's office.

Though but 26, McSwiggin had gone far. When he began his career under Crowe, the beer murders had just got under way. Rival gangsters had been exterminating one another at such a wholesale rate that the state's attorney's staff had to be augmented to keep up with the rush of business.

And McSwiggin had shone brilliantly in prosecuting the numerous murder cases. In his brief career he had obtained more hanging verdicts than any other assistant in the office.

Planned to Resign.

But he planned to resign the following July and join John F. Tyrell, a celebrated Chicago attorney. His excellent record as a prosecutor would stand him in good stead, it was predicted, when his old friends and enemies of the underworld came to know that the severest prosecutors make the best defense lawyers.

Big Jim Colosimo

Exactly why McSwiggin joined the party in the big sedan, bound for Cicero, has never been altogether settled. One theory is that he wanted to study conditions in Cicero and chose as his companions those who knew conditions inside out. Another theory is that he merely went along to drink some of that excellent beer. His sister later stated that Duffy came into the house and invited Bill to come along.

Shortly after leaving the McSwiggin house the car developed engine trouble and Klondike O'Donnell stopped at a garage he patronized. He left his car there and borrowed another.

Here was something else the Capone scouts had not foreseen and as a result the party cruised about Cicero for several hours without being molested.

But the assassins picked up the trail at last and at 7 o'clock deployed into battle array in front of Harry Madigan's saloon on West Roosevelt road. They waited, eyes riveted on the door of the saloon.

Fifteen minutes passed—half an hour.

And then the front door opened and five young men came out, laughing and talking as they started toward their machine at the curb.

The Cars Move.

Suddenly the five cars half a block away moved forward, one in front, two on the left and right, one in the rear, and the fifth in the center. They gathered momentum swiftly. The first car, four lengths ahead, swept by, then two others, and then—

As the single car in the center passed, a curtain lifted and the black muzzle of a weapon appeared. Immediately the thing roared, spitting a hundred bullets at the group by the curb. The O'Donnells dropped to the pavement an instant before the stream of lead reached them. As they dropped they screamed a warning to their companions.

But McSwiggin and the other two could not escape.

Four seconds—and it was all over. McSwiggin and Doherty were killed instantly, a dozen bullets in each body, and Duffy ran fifty yards before he toppled over.

Klondike and his brother bundled the bodies of McSwiggin and Doherty into the car and sped away before onlookers realized what it was all about. When the brothers saw that the two were beyond all help they stopped at Berwyn, a nearby town, and left the bodies at 16th street and Wisconsin avenue, where they later were found.

So Chicago woke up to a new sensation in the warfare of the gangs. The whole country read the story of the machine-gun murder. Here indeed was a barbarous state of affairs.

Capone Missing.

It was at first thought that McSwiggin had been deliberately slain because of activities as prosecutor—and possibly because of his sympathies. For several days the identity of the two survivors remained unrevealed. Captain of Detectives John Stege asserted that Mc-

PAGES FROM MY LIFE

— BY —
FEODOR CHALIAPINE

"The only authorized English translation of my autobiography."

Fedor Chaliapin

THOUGH I had taken up singing, I continued to attend a private school kept by a lady —Madame V—where boys and girls studied side by side.

I was fairly quick and easily learned my lessons, and was consequently a careless, idle scholar, much preferring to spend my time in skating—on one skate only, as a pair would have cost me too dear. I frequently lost my schoolbooks, and sometimes sold them to get the wherewithal to buy candies; and the result was that I hardly ever knew my lessons.

I used to sit next to a girl about two years older than myself, called "Tanya." She used to help me out when I was in difficulties. The assistance she gave me caused me to feel a most ardent sympathy for her, and on one occasion in the corridor, when we were changing classrooms, the warmth of my gratitude led me to kiss her.

"How can you?" she said. "The teacher will see us. When we go to play in the yard, we will hide together, and then you can kiss me."

I did not know that one ought not to kiss girls at my age, and merely understood that one might not kiss them in front of the teacher—presumably because that was not included in the lessons she gave us.

It dawned on me obscurely that kisses were forbidden things when, kissing Tanya in a quiet corner, I found out that it was much nicer than kissing in public.

Of course the teacher soon caught us and my little sweetheart and I were expelled from the school. I don't know whether my father and mother knew the reason; probably not, as otherwise I should have gotten a memorable beating.

I soon afterwards entered the Fourth Public School of the quarter, but very soon left it as a result of a strange occurrence. Once when on my way to school a big lad jumped out from a gateway and struck me on the head with a stick, drawing blood, and then bolted.

I howled; then put some snow on the wound, and continued on my way, wondering why anyone should have struck me with a stick. I told no one about it at school, nor yet at home. If my father had found me with a broken head he would have whipped me. The wound began to fester, but was not visible beneath my hair.

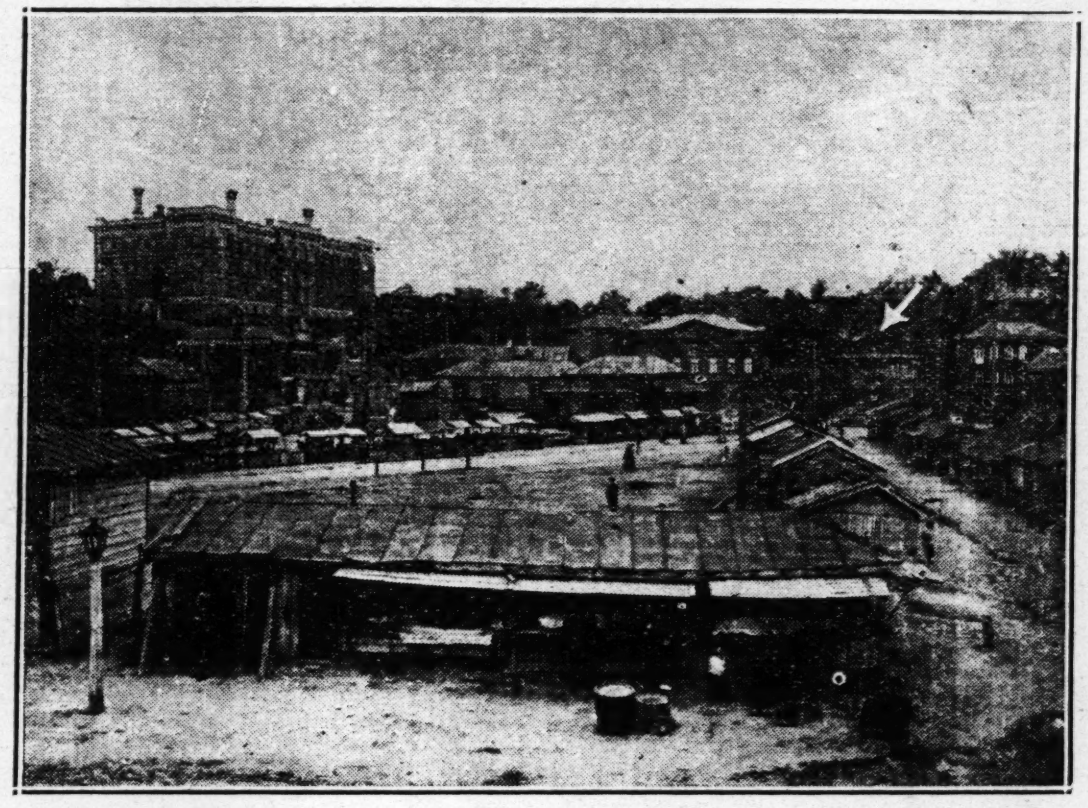

By mischance, a few days later I got into trouble at school or else answered the teacher badly, and as ill-luck would have it he was fond of what we called "pinching a partridge."

"Pinching a partridge" means taking a tuft of your hair between the thumb and first finger and pulling it upwards violently. The sensation produced is like having your neck broken. The teacher "pinched the partridge" just where my head was hurt. I howled with pain. Blood and suppurating matters flowed down my pate from the broken place. I ran home as fast as I could. My parents whipped me when I got home, for being an idle scholar, but I said:

"You may cut me in half, but I won't go to that school again!"

The Worthless Apprentice.

They called me a worthless creature and not a few other hard names; then my father decided that nothing good would come of me at school, and apprenticed me to the bootmaker Tonkoff, my godfather. I had been at his house before that as a guest with my father and mother, and liked going there very much. A glass cupboard stood in his workshop, on the shelves of which were displayed boot-trees and pieces of leather. The smell of the leather attracted me, and I used to want to play with the boot-trees. Everything was very interesting.

The Kazan Market where Chaliapine lived as a young boy. The Chaliapines lived in the basement of the house marked with an arrow. The low sheds in the foreground are market booths; of the larger stores in the middle background, two are taverns, two are fish stores and one advertises "Pevo"—beer.

When he handed me over to the bootmaker, my father impressed upon me:

"Learn to make boots, and you will be somebody in the world, a master craftsman. You will have money, support yourself, and even perhaps help others.

I was delighted to become a bootmaker, as I felt sure it was better than learning the multiplication table.

Tonkoff was a big sturdy curly-headed man in a white shirt with satin trousers. He received me kindly, saying:

"Look on today, and tomorrow you can begin to work."

I slept badly that night, being overcome with a desire to commence work. In the morning we all got up at six. I was fearfully sleepy. I was given a glass of tea and some bread, and then my master showed me how to twist the waxed thread.

I set to work very zealously, but to my surprise I did not get on very well with it. At first the workmen did not take much notice of me, but soon they began to call me a blockhead.

When I had learned to twist the thread, I had to put in the bristles from both sides. This turned out still more difficult. I felt very sleepy. Still, I was not beaten the first day.

I found the sewing easier than twisting the thread, but of course I did not master it without some encouragement imparted by means of blows. I was glad that the boss was my godfather, because the workmen were less hard on me for this reason.

But I was not fated to become a bootmaker.

One day, I heard that my little brother, Nicolai, was very ill and, on Sunday when I went home, I found that he had died. Certainly, my father was a drunkard who beat us all, still underneath, he had a soft kind heart, and when he lost his little son, I realized that the blow had struck hard. I will never forget the day of the funeral. I did not see my father cry but I knew that he was heartbroken, as with slow, proud steps, he walked silently to the cemetery, his head bent and his bushy brows knit, carrying on his shoulder the rude wooden coffin, wrapped in a cloth, which held the tiny body.

Shortly afterwards, I caught cold and was soon seriously ill. It seemed I had scarlet fever.

As soon as my godfather realized how ill I was, I was taken to the hospital, where I found my little sister also a sufferer from the same disease.

My mother, sitting on my sister's bed, said to someone:

"My dear friends, how can they cut a person's throat!"

Everything wavered about me. My head seemed full of fog, but I gathered that they wished to cut my sister's throat. I was not surprised, as I reflected that as we were in a hospital and not in a robber's den, probably her throat must be cut because it was necessary. But my mother would not give her consent, and my sister died. It was now my turn. But I began to recover.

Enter Shop of Andreiff.

When I got well, my parents again apprenticed me to a bootmaker, but not to the same one. My father thought that my godfather was too easy-going with me and would never succeed in teaching me anything.

I was in for it properly in the hands of the bootmaker Andreieff. Though I knew how to twist the thread and to sew, he obliged me to wash the floor, put on and clean the "samovar," go with his wife to the market and carry her heavy provision basket. Altogether, it was penal servitude. I was beaten mercilessly; indeed, I am astonished that they did not make a cripple of me with so much beating. I think it was not due to lack of zeal on their part, but to the strength of my bones.

But I learned to do the work fairly well, and even began to do small repairs myself at holiday-times; I mended downtrodden heels and put on patches.

During the autumn life was still bearable. The evenings were long, and our thrifty master was unwilling to light the lamps, so before it grew quite dark we worked in semi-obscurity. One could rest a little. However, as Christmas drew near the work increased and we used to continue till 12 o'clock at night and got up at 5 in the morning. This 24-hour working day was too much for me. As things were I was nothing but skin and bones, and I now began to fear that even my bones would get thinner.

Whilst working at the shop I still continued my choir-singing in my leisure hours, although only at the regular church services. I could not sing at weddings and funerals, owing to lack of time, and of course I could not sing at the night services, and I could hardly drag one foot after the other when evening came.

When the springtime came and it grew warmer, so that one could go barefoot in the streets, I told my father that I was too ill to work. I was not suffering from any well-defined illness, but I felt very exhausted, and hard swellings and yellowish spots made their appearance on my feet. They were not corns, but a sort of hardening underneath the skin. I felt no pain, but took advantage of their appearance to tell my father that I was suffering with my feet.

What was my consternation when my father took me to the hospital. As we went I reflected:

"Heavens, whatever will happen now. The doctor will know that there is nothing wrong with my feet! Father will thrash me and send me back to the workshop, and there they will beat me, too."

But science saved me from any such martyrdom. The doctor felt my feet, summoned the students and said something to them, then prescribed me an embrocation and forbade me to walk much. Going to the drug-store with my father to get the embrocation, I limped still more, out of respect and gratitude to science. But as soon as my father left me, I ran home as fast as I could, and joyfully told my mother that I was sick, but that it was not serious, and that it was only necessary for me to use the embrocation. My mother sympathized with me. I rubbed my feet with

Fast and Furious Was the Climax of the Courtship of Richard Barthelmess and Katherine Wilson

BY FORNEY WYLY
Author of "Broadway Banter"

THE announcement last week of the engagement of Katherine Wilson to Richard Barthelmess came as a surprise even to their most intimate friends. In fact, I think, if the truth were known, it came somewhat as a surprise to them. For while Katherine and Dick have known each other for some three years, they hadn't seen each other for two years prior to one mad, mad week before the announcement.

Mr. Barthelmess, being the film star that he is, is known to all of you. For the benefit of those unlucky persons who might not know of Miss Wilson so well,, I'll stop a moment and perhaps needlessly explain just who she is.

From her home in Jacksonville, Florida, Miss Wilson made countless social visits to Atlanta some five or six years ago. While there she visited Dolly Blalock and then later when that delightful lady turned Mrs. Eugene Black, Jr., Miss Wilson also visited Anne Patterson and will long be remembered for the way she looked in the yellow chiffon dress she wore as a bridesmaid to Miss Patterson's wedding when the latter married Glenn Ryman. Katherine was a frequent opera visitor, and was a soothing sight to many of those souls in your auditorium who were cringing beneath the weight of some Wagnerian off-key. Katherine became a part of Atlanta's fashionable life at the time that Nellie Dodd gave watermelon parties in her Buick, when Eloise Robinson's telephone number was IVy 211 and when Nina Hopkins' electric brougham had not collapsed beneath her.

At the dinner-dances, Katherine might be seen toddling with Kendrick Smith, grapevining with William McKenzie, one-stepping with Robert Maddox, Jr., and having to listen to your correspondent talk. And so now that we've gotten her placed, let's get along with the story.

Some four years ago, it occurred to Miss Wilson she'd like to go on the stage. And it seems that anything which occurs to this intriguing person invariably materializes. It so happens the second play she was in was something called "Cock O' the Roost," which lasted only three weeks. On the morning after its closing—this was a little over three years ago—the telephone roused Miss Wilson from her slumber.

"This is Inspiration Pictures," the voice on the other end said. "Mr. Barthelmess has seen you in your recent show and thinks you are exactly the type to play 'the other girl' in 'New Toy,' his next picture in which his wife, Mary Hay, will co-star with him. He asks that you please come over to the studio and have a screen test."

Now this same Miss Wilson chances to be the one girl in the entire world who wasn't interested in going into the movies. And she promptly said so. However, she figured out it might be fun rummaging around a studio, and more to be amused than anything else, she dropped over for a test. It should further be recorded that on being presented to Mr. Barthelmess Miss Wilson did not immediately stump her toe and burst into ninety-five different variations of giggling. Meeting a movie star of even Mr. Barthelmess' importance was to Katherine no matter of great shakes. Anyway, they finally talked her into taking the part in the picture in which she was very good.

But she still resolutely held to her distaste for movie acting and flatly refused the future cinema offers that were fairly shoved at her. She told me only recently that the six weeks of making that picture were among the most tiresome six weeks of her life. During the filming of the picture she and Mr. Barthelmess were of course constantly thrown together. His admiration for her work in a line entirely new to her grew each day. And if you knew Dick, you'd easily see how his charming manner instantly caused Katherine to see what a thoroughly good egg he was. During the making of the picture, they were included in many of the same theater and supper-club parties. I remember perfectly that they attended "Lady Be Good" in the same party, and I also saw them dancing together at the club which was then called the "Trocodero."

However, at the completion of the picture, Katherine and Dick saw nothing of each other, except of course, now and then in passing. It was at this time that a young Mr. Wyly arrived from Atlanta for the express purpose of raising the level of the stage by his writings about it. And to shorten a story I seem to enjoy lengthening, it turned out that it was through a note of introduction from Miss Wilson that I, panting and gaping, got myself in on the inside of Mr. Barthelmess 'studio. I was admitted immediately and nobody could have made more over this friend of Miss Wilson's than Mr. Barthelmess. Throughout that winter, Mr. Barthelmess left word that I was to go and come at will in his studio. He would never fail to ask me how Katherine was coming on with her work and what her plans were, etc. And she during these past few years has given excellent performances in "Love 'Em and Leave 'Em," and "An American Tragedy."

During the past few months, Mr. Barthelmess and his wife, Mary Hay, got through with their divorce. Mr. Barthelmess was then on the Pacific coast where he now makes his pictures exclusively. About two weeks ago, he came on to New York to be present at the premiere of his new picture, "The Patent Leather Kid." From what I can gather, he must have phoned Miss Wilson from the station. For if they missed having, lunch, tea or dinner together during those first eight mad days, I don't know when it was. On the eighth day, Katherine's mother announced the engagement. And you think you've seen two blissfully happy people together, but you haven't until you see Kay and Dick.

By the time this reaches you, Mr. Barthelmess will have left for Hollywood, where he has to start work on a new picture immediately. On this coming Saturday, Miss Wilson and Miss Kellogg, a friend with whom Katherine has always shared an apartment in New York, will leave for California to visit Dick and his mother. And there adorable little Mary Hay Barthelmess, who spends six months of the year with her mother and six with her father, will be waiting to see Daddy's new wife. Katherine will stay on the coast for a month. Then she plans to go to Jacksonville for a week with her mother and father, and then back here to New York, where the wedding will take place on Thanksgiving. Beatrice Lillie, (Lady Peel) will be Katherine's matron of honor, but whether or not it is to be a big wedding is not yet settled.

By the way, Katherine plans to retire from the stage, temporarily anyway. She and Dick will make their home in Hollywood.

Very shortly the new pictures that they have just posed for will be finished, so watch your rotogravure section carefully during the next few weeks if you want to see the happiest two people in the world looking out at you.

Richard Barthelmess and his fiancee, Katherine Wilson.

Tragic Romance of Lowly C

How a Lover's Quarrel Sent T Molly Baker to an Untimely Her Heart-Broken Sweet Prison Cell for Twelve

WHEN warm-hearted, emotional Molly Baxter first met Freddy Boxall, she was a pale little wisp of a girl in pigtails, and he was a tall, goodlooking stripling who minded the cattle on her uncle's estate in Oxfordshire.

"Her heart is not strong, Boxall, and the doctors say she needs more exercise," J. B. Franklin, the uncle, and lord of the manor, told the cowhand. "Part of your duty is to walk with her when she feels like walking, and restrain her from over exertion. You will be at her service whenever she requires you."

Then, all unconscious that he had set the powder train for a most explosive romance, the self-satisfied land owner went about more important affairs.

That was two years ago, and in the intervening years Molly shot up from an anaemic child in gingham clothes to a high-tempered, impulsive, volcanic girl-woman of fifteen years.

She and the boy her lordly uncle had told of to be her squire and protector sauntered many a long mile along country roads, through shady lanes, over pleasant meadows, by the sides of murmuring streams.

She and Freddy Boxall had many a conversation of a sort never contemplated by the smug Mr. Franklin and, starting about a year ago, the talk usually turned on the fascinating subject of love. To a romantic girl and an ardent boy there is no topic quite so interesting, nor quite so dangerous.

What any student of human nature could have told Mr. Franklin would happen did happen. Molly, the niece and heiress of the country grandee, fell in love with Freddy, the good-looking farmhand, and he fell in love with her. Songs have been sung, stories written and plays fabricated out of just such material but the romance of Molly and Fred Boxall was not destined to have the happy ending that is the only satisfactory ending for a countryside love story.

Freddy Boxall stood up in Oxford Assizes the other day and listened apathetically as Mr. Justice Greer sentenced him to twelve years in prison for manslaughter. He had been duly found guilty of killing Molly Baker, the high-born heiress who smiled on him.

Circumstances surrounding the killing have aroused more than the interest usually manifested in homicide in England, and there has been a good deal of sympathy for the boy and the girl who were caught in the web of destiny.

"I didn't mean to kill her," Boxall said, with a show of emotion, when they put him on the stand. "She met me near a row of hedges in the village of Noke that night, and told me that she wanted me to marry her, and was going to tell her uncle and aunt that she preferred me as a husband to a young man of her own class. I objected, for I knew the pride of race of the Franklins, and was aware that if they learned I had been making love to her they were more likely to drive me out of Oxfordshire than welcome me into their family circle.

A recent photograph of Miss Molly Baker, the Oxfordshire heiress, whose love affair with a farm hand, had such a dramatic climax

"Molly, though, was an imperious little lady, and she insisted. When I tried to reason with her, she got it into her head I was declining the honor, refusing to marry her, and she became furious and slapped me across the face.

"The sudden blow made me angry, too, and I seized her by the throat and shook her. While I was shaking her, she went limp, and sagged in my arms. I picked her up and carried her in under the hedge. She was already dead. Panic overtook me, and I walked along the road for a time. Then I went to the police station and surrendered."

Doctors who testified for the government said Boxall's story was probable, and agreed that the girl died of heart disease, superinduced by fright or excitement. The verdict of guilty of manslaughter was returned largely because the boy (who is not yet twenty) admitted he and his master's daughter had loved not wisely but too well, and she had a morbid unjustified fear she was to become a mother. In view of that, and his confession that he had laid violent hands upon her for a moment, the jurors were dissuaded from letting him off scot free.

Interest in Freddy Boxall's plight was heightened during the trial by the discovery that the cowhand who loved the lady was not a country yokel, but the unrecognized son of a baronet of ancient line. The boy said his mother had told him who his father was when he became eighteen years old.

"In my heart," he informed his jailers, "I considered my blood as blue as that of J. B. Franklin and resented the callousness of my own father who left me uncared for, to be a cowhand on a stranger's farm."

Boxall testified that when first he was instructed to act as Molly's escort, she was only thirteen years old, and he regarded her as a sickly child, supersensitive, as sickly children are, but with an impish humor which she occasionally exercised at his expense. Until a few months before the killing in the shadow of the hedges, he persisted in that attitude. Which of them first spoke of love he did not divulge but for some months before she was slain the girl was his acknowledged sweetheart, and expected in her own heart some day to be his wife.

They had guarded their secret with the thoroughness that even inexperienced lovers acquire in such affairs. Not even the gabbiest of the neighborhood gossips ever dared to suspect there was anything between the haughty little Miss Baker, the heiress of the Franklins, and the handsome boy who helped her over rough places in the fields, carried her across brooks, held her parasol while she rested after a hard climb on the hills, and cautioned her when she showed an inclination to over exercise.

After a time they met not only in the daytime, when he was acting as her escort, but in the evenings as well. It was the girl's custom to go three evenings a week to the home of Miss Bartlett, a teacher in the Lower Noke farm district, for private instruction. After Boxall told her of his love, she missed many an evening in the teacher's quiet parlor that her uncle and aunt never knew about. On such evenings, she and the cattle herder went "roaming in the gloaming."

As the affair progressed, it was the boy who kept a diary ,and not the girl. The record was read into the case when he was tried for slaying her.

"Molly seemed a lot more friendly than on most days," one entry read. Another lamented that "Molly had gone back to her old, aloof manner, and would not speak in a friendly way." A third recorded the fact that the girl was still using the grand manner to keep him in his place. A fourth, that she was going away for a little vacation, and apparently did not intend to make up with him before she left.

During the girl's absence, which was in January of this year, the diary of Freddy was filled with lamentations, self reproach, longing. "Miss Molly very much," one entry went. "Did not know how terribly much I loved her until she went away."

It was during her absence that he took solace in memories of a happier period in their romance, writing "Molly kissed me, a month ago. I wish she could kiss me every day."

Molly returned to the farm in Oxfordshire, and Boxall's diary took on a happier tone. Then despair again. She would not speak to him and resented his even looking at her. On January 16 he wrote that she was in a temper. He asked her for a kiss, and she said she "was not having any, thanks." On January 18, though, he burst forth with a veritable hymn of happiness: "Molly all right again. Speaking again today."

All through the naive diary ran the record of ardent love, warm and willing return, misunderstanding, stormy scenes, periods of estrangement, passionate reconciliations. "She's only playing with me," he would write one day. And, on the next: "Molly wants my photograph. When I asked her for a caress, she smothered me with kisses."

At times this subconscious bar-sinister complex would show itself. He wrote on one occasion: "Thinks she's ever so much better than me. Put on a face as long as a wet week when I asked her to go strollling."

So Freddy's diary would go —one day relating his joy and the next anger and puzzlement at Molly, whose whims and mannerisms were never quite clear to the young man who insists he loved her dearly.

Sometimes Freddy Boxall found relief in poetry, or verse, at least. One of his compositions was as follows:

I am in love, as you will see.
My love is you; do you love me?

And another time:
It's hard to lose a friend
When life is full of hope.
It's harder still to lose a pal
When your eyes are full of soap.

One suspects from the happy-go-lucky tenor of that last one that the love affair was going rather well just

"When I said I could never marry her, she struck me savagely across the face. In a flash of anger I seized her by the throat, and as I shook her, the girl I loved better than life went limp in my arms. But I swear I didn't mean to kill her; I loved her too much"

when your eyes are full of soap.

"I loved her too much to do that," the unhappy boy mumbled. "I suppose, though, that my shaking contributed to her death."

Now Molly is gone and the powerful young hands which the courts said aided in sending the life out of Molly's frail little body grip tightly the iron door of his "home"—a prison cell.

Under cross examination, he said he had no idea his angry violence would end fatally, or even seriously. He had little hope of marrying her, but certainly did not wish her dead.

"Molly was spoiled," he added, explaining their last meeting. "She always had been given everything she wanted, because she was in poor health. She was confident her uncle would let her have—well, me. I was older. I knew better. Mr. Franklin would never let his niece marry a cowhand on his farm. Had he learned we were in love he would have used every vestige of his vast influence to have me forced out of the country. And I could not have told him that from my father I inherited a tradition and a pride greater than his own. I was not my father's son before the world."

Mayfair and Picadilly Circus, surfeited with the scandals paraded in the penny prints, bid fair soon to forget Freddy Boxall and his fair, frail Molly; even the courts have turned to other matters, for this business of law and justice and punishment must go on and on, into the field of other things.

THE SENTIMENTALISTS

INSTALLMENT X.

TINA was pleased, impressed and not at all shamed by the offer she had made and its reception. She asked herself again with something of her lost manner, why the devil she couldn't have fallen in love with M. Cuvelier? That would have been reasonable, exciting, and so much easier.

There was no answer save the lapping of the sea, and she went slowly up to the deck of the Hirondelle, where everything was friendly and welcoming. Each rope, each spar, was familiar. The planks felt clean and steady beneath her feet, unlike the bamboo of Li-Goon's, the hot soil of Netherlandia or the rough boards of Hobson's house. A long deep breath of relief escaped her—to be home again! Samuel awaited her below, needing her love. The bell struck, telling the ship's calm time. The past did not matter; present and future were simply affairs of little tasks and little interests which occupied but did not distress, filling every minute of all the days and nights with quiet, numbing content. She felt it was her wish never to leave the Hirondelle again, but to dwell forever with Samuel and the heedless men of the brig, alone, at peace, draining no dangerous cups of joy to the bitter dregs.

Mr. Carrington materialized before her, a wooden creature, demanding nothing, giving nothing.

"Come back?" he said.

"Yes—has the captain?" The question came naturally; she was on the Hirondelle. It was nice to be talking again of simple things which were of interest but did not matter.

"No."

"Well, I'm tired. I think I'll turn in. Good night"—sensible, normal, lulling. She was nothing to Mr. Carrington, nor he to her. She liked that.

"Good night," said Mr. Carrington. He asked no questions. She had come back; she was going to bed. The surprising sheet of paper folded in his pocket could not tempt him to speech. He knew what he knew. When the right time came he would tell her what the stars held. Not tonight. She was tired. Had gone to bed. He lounged upon the rail, gazing up; he paced about tirelessly on silent feet; he lounged again. The hours went by. The ship floated on the waters like a sleeping gull. It did not occur to Mr. Carrington to think that the captain was a long time away. As a reader may sit late over a book, unconscious of time or place, so the mate remained, unbored and absorbed. The great page of the sky was there for him.

The air had turned cooler and gained the effect of thinness which comes with the waning of the night before the noises of an approaching boat rang hollowly, as if from a cave. Dutifully the mate lit the lantern and put it in place by the ladder. She came into the circle of light and nosed alongside, the weary rowers bent over their oars. Their wet brown bodies glowed and they rubbed their sore palms together. Cap'n Whelan ascended, fanning himself slowly with his hat. There were furrows in his brow, and his wet mouth sucked in and out as he chewed the stump of a cigar. A thin strip of tobacco crawled down his chin.

"Morning, mister," he remarked in an abstracted tone. "Young woman back?"

"Yes."

"Say anything?"

"No."

Cap'n Whelan ran his fingers round his neck, and the rag of collar parted limply from the hot skin. Such fripperies irked him, and he fumbled with the stud for a second as if he would take it out, but forgot and stood mouthing the cigar end.

"Funny business!" he grunted, lifting a thick brow in a manner which invited a question. But Mr. Carrington evinced no interest in the funny business which had kept his master out so late.

"So."

Cap'n Whelan swung from foot to foot. He wanted some one to talk to, for there was much on his mind. A shadowy hope caused him to strike a match that he might see the mate's face. He was disappointed; as well have looked at a mask. He applied the light to his cigar, and his own features heavy and deeply lined, glistened momentarily. The stump did not light and the flame reached Cap'n Whelan's wet fingers, to fizzle out so promptly that they were not burned.

It was a waste of time, talking to that damned mate.

"Get the boat in, mister; shan't need her again," he growled, and went below. In the cabin he stripped and, naked save for the flannel belt about his stomach, sat in the creaking wicker chair to cool off and think. But his mind worked sluggishly. It moved no further than the fact that life was a rum business, and that Samuel had made it rummer, but not so rum that Cap'n Whelan could not cope with it. He found a certain satisfaction in taking obscene oaths to this effect. A wish to see the babe arose in him, and what Cap'n Whelan wanted on his brig was his. He threw a sarong about him, crossed the saloon, and opened the cabin door.

A lantern burned dimly. Tina lay upon the bunk in her clothes. She was asleep, her dark hair tumbled across the pillow, her lips parted in a smile, tears bright on her cheeks and on her long curled lashes. The earth of Netherlandia still clung to her shoes, and the arm which curled round Samuel was smudged with ink. But Cap'n Whelan saw none of these things. His only interest was the babe whose downy head snuggled to Tina's breast. Samuel was sleeping as a rose does, curled up, fresh, sweet. The master's lips and cheeks worked. Kid was all right—that young person, good with him! He felt ready for bunk now.

Only a Malay, still as chiseled stone, remained awake aboard the Hirondelle until the dawn set the brig buzzing like a hive. Amid the activity Tina stood unnoticed by the side, watching the strip of beach and road with a kind of lifeless intensity. A boy appeared from the narrow break in the jungle. His right hand held a stick, in the cleft end of which something white was wedged. A letter! Tina's heart missed a beat. She gripped the rail and the color drained out of her face, leaving it waxen. How slowly the boy moved—he crept, he dawdled. Perhaps he would stop at Lo-Goon's after all? But he did not. He passed and came slowly, slowly—as if an invisible hand held him back—to the jetty. She glanced along the deck. Mr. Carrington was mustering hands about the capstan. Cap'n Whelan was bawling orders. Her anxious eyes turned back to the messenger. He was in a canoe now. It bobbed and bowed on the waves the brisk breeze stirred. She wondered if she dared crave a moment's delay, and before she could frame the words the need had passed. The canoe was alongside, and—still breathless and sweating from his haste—the naked boy, with some jabber which she could not understand, was holding the letter up to her. She snatched it as the capstan began to growl.

The envelope was addressed to Tina in a big bovish scrawl. She hurried below. Safely in the cabin with the door shut, she did not open it at once, however, but paused and shivered. If he had written——? But she mastered herself. Well, this would settle it. She ripped the envelope and drew out a single sheet of paper. "Tina! Tina! Tina!" the letter began in the same unformed hand. Her eyes were too misty for her to read on. She could see no more. The page was blank. She blinked the mists away.

The page was blank. Only those three words: Tina! Tina! Tina! She stared drearily at them. Was it the cry of his undecided and bewildered heart—the only thing he could send before she went away? Or had he written a letter and, bungling, inclosed this sheet he had begun and flung aside? That would be so like Johnnie! But if he had written what—?

The ship was moving. The circle of the porthole framed Li-Goon's, moved on to the path which led to Hobson's house, moved again to the squalid huts farther along the street. And then, as the sails filled, there was only jungle to be seen and sea. Tina looked at the page again. There were still only three words upon it. Samuel began to cry, demanding his morning bath. She thrust the page down the front of her frock, where it crackled dryly and sharply against her heart.

The Hirondelle went merrily across the merry waters.

The brig's position at noon was shown on the chart which lay before Cap'n Whelan. His thumb left wet marks as he made measurements, and his brow was wrinkled with the labor of calculation. Nodding at the round face of the clock, he replaced the chart in its locker and went on deck, where he gave Mr. Carrington a new course.

"Going t' make it after midnight," he added, and his protruding eyes challenged the mate. Mr. Carrington repeated the order in his disinterested fashion and proceeded to see it carried out. For once his officer's taciturnity pleased Cap'n Whelan. He took credit. A master should be able to give any command without having it questioned, but, at the same time, most men in the circumstances would have betrayed surprise, if only by the flicker of an eyelash. The Hirondelle was properly run—there was discipline aboard. With hands tucked into trouser tops he swaggered about, glad to snatch any satisfaction in these days of doubt and difficulty.

The new course brought the setting sun over the bows. A fresh breeze sang in the shrouds and the brig lay over to it, swaying from wave to wave with healthy liveliness. New Guinea was a long, gray cloud to port. The shadows of the sails moved blackly upon the decks. A sour smell of copra—which the wind could not entirely dispel—crept from the hatch, for the Hirondelle was returning from the Redemption group. The goats, rendered unhappy by the motion, moped in their pens like sad old men, and Samuel's voice was raised in woe which had nothing to do with the sea. His first tooth was giving trouble. Tina, sitting amidships, rocked him in vain. Cap'n Whelan watched her and was pleased. He could not imagine what they would have done without her. Kid crying like that! But it was all right; she knew.

Had it not involved suffering for Samuel, Tina would have welcomed the coming of the tooth, for his constant demands took her mind from her own concerns. In this he proved her friend again; the less time Tina had for thought the better. A fortnight had passed since their departure from Netherlandia, but the sea, as is its habit, had built the days into a tall wall, behind which Johnnie Summers and those full, mad hours were far away and long ago. The brief and sudden storms of joy and grief seemed to have gone forever; but she knew they had not, and their echoes rang on in her soul, so that often her eyes were vacant, the corners of her mouth drooped, and her sensitive nostrils trembled. Despair was a more common companion than hope; she rejoiced briefly and regretted much.

Cap'n Whelan, questioned, had grunted that he had no idea when they would be in Netherlandia again. The sea's barriers isolated them. Nothing could be done. Even had it been possible to communicate with Summers, she would not have known what to say, for she was as ignorant of his feelings as if they had never met. Sometimes she saw him waiting, eager eyed, on the beach for the Hirondelle which never came, and she ached with longing; more frequently she saw him seeking forgetfulness by plunging deeper into the mire. That was even more painful—not only to be forgotten but to have wrought harm when she might have saved. Again it was indicated that love for her meant nothing but disillusion and suffering. But now she could not win back her former adroit and hard-headed attitude to sex. Love and sex could not be disassociated. That power had gone in the general smash. Only Samuel remained—the lover who never failed her and whom she could not fail.

Tina Has Pleasant Surprise.

The tiny community on the Hirondelle had grown silent. There was no hostility between them, but they seldom spoke. Each sought a more complete solitude in which to consider matters of no interest to the others. To the men the habit was of long standing, but Tina was surprised to find how well life could go without speech—the last sense cultivated and the one least missed. Mr. Carrington's contempt for words developed in her. The incessant talk of the world seemed a needless mass of sound, meaningless and idle as the chatter of parrots. The silent hours slipped by; she shrank from the thought of what they might have been had they been full of discussions and questions and argument.

Tina was very lonely.

Dinner that night followed the established rule. She and Cap'n Whelan ate together, the mate being on watch. The saloon swung gently, and the lantern threw the master's great shadow on the bulkhead, where it brooded, edging restlessly from side to side. The waves made slapping sounds. The steward came and went, balancing gracefully on bare feet. Tina's ears listened lest Samuel should cry, but her spirit was far away. The meal finished, Cap'n Whelan sucked his tongue up against his palate and wiped his hand across his red, wet mouth.

"Be in port fer an hour or so t'night," he announced, gruff and abrupt.

"O——?" Tina was all attention. Her face lit; the spoon she was just putting in her saucer clinked.

"Where——?" she asked sharply.

"Tudoopa."

A Blue Ribbon Serial — By Dale Collins

"O," the exclamation was quite colorless now.

"Shan't get in till three or so. No use waiting up. Can't get ashore. Hell of a hole—nothing. Expecting a letter there from the steamer. May have t'go t'Mayaboyna fer some more loading—that's all. Get the letter an' shove off."

Tina scarcely heard him. A letter? Was it any use of her writing? By the time he had finished speaking she saw it would be idle to arouse his jealousy. How could she write? What could she write? She would wait. They would put into Netherlandia again presently. A letter could serve no urpose. The resignation of the sea was in her—the resignation which sailors have on long, life devouring passages when, hungering for loved ones, they write seldom or not at all.

"No, I'll turn in," she decided. Tina retired early now. Sleep, with Samuel's little body in the curve of her arm, was a blessed sanctuary.

"Wise," agreed Cap'n Whelan, and crossed to her cabin to smoke and think for a while. Mr. Carrington could wait. The master sat stolidly in that foreign corner of his brig. Its atmosphere no longer worried him; the place was the right kind of nest for a kid. Rank smoke from his pipe drifted heavily about. The dresses swished on their hooks, making a quiet sound as of people dancing near at hand. Cap'n Whelan's heart as he dreamed there was as gentle as any woman's. Kid was coming along well. Getting longer each day, he swore. And teeth now. He bit upon the pipe stem with such teeth as he had left—funny, he was losing his, kid was getting them. Rum that! He had a misty fancy of the reincarnation of his teeth . . . ! Growing up, all right. But why send him to sea? Why not a respectable job ashore—in a bank or something? Make a real gentleman of him. You didn't see much of a son who was at sea . . .

With reluctance he took himself away from the object of such engrossing musings and relieved the mate. Mr. Carrington was not annoyed even in his secret thoughts. If he was late, he was late. Wind and wave were talkative in a pleasant, gossipy way. There was no chill in the air. As the dimmest of shadows the lightless coast unwound. Shortly after midnight a squall with rain drove over. Cap'n Whelan was pleased when it passed and the air cleared. Having thrown away the chance to enter by daylight he did not want thick weather now. The course was changed again, and she ran back. About two o'clock the deck awoke to fresh activity. Additional lookouts were posted, and all hands were turned out. Cap'n Whelan and his mate concentrated, for although the breeze was favorable and the entrance wide and familiar they were too well versed in sea lore to leave anything to chance. Their eyes picked up landmarks and the master took frequent bearings. At intervals the lookouts intoned. Orders were shouted and sail was taken in.

A dark headland showed to starboard, and the Hirondelle felt her way past it, and held on. Ahead a single splash of light showed and hills rose against the stars. Toward this gleam the brig crept, until, when it seemed very close, Cap'n Whelan roared an order, and she came up into the wind, canvas volleying. The anchor went with a roar and a splash, which the hills of Netherlandia flung back thinly.

"Take the dinghy and get ashore. Bring the letter straight back. Still some one up at Li-Goon's."

"Ay," said Mr. Carrington, and went.

Cap'n Whelan marched about, balancing his heavy body. He regretted the necessity for the call, but business was business and the young person's presence could not be allowed to upset it. The letter from Mayaboyna had to be collected. The danger of that boy would blow over in a month or so and he had a plan in his head that would help. But although he had contrived cunningly the light at Li-Goon's disturbed him. He had not expected that so late. As Samuel's guardian he could leave nothing to chance. Supposing now. . . . He set himself to prepare for eventualities.

As a result of this preparedness Cap'n Whelan was at ease when the sound of paddles drew him to the rail and he saw a canoe coming alongside.

"Who is it?" he challenged.

"It's Summers. I must speak to you." The answer insisted while trying to plead ingratiatingly.

"Come aboard," Cap'n Whelan said cursorily.

This surprising invitation found immediate acceptance. Summers tumbled over the rail hastily, relieved and excited. But before he could speak Cap'n Whelan addressed him in a manner which was quite subdued for him considering the circumstances.

"Listen t'me, young feller. As y'u'll gather, I've changed t'wards y' a bit fer the young woman's sake, but yer not welcome t'night, an' here's why: we sail right away an' I'm not going t' be delayed by y' nor nobody. So get off now—get t'hell out o' it!"

He towered above Summers, inexorable and grim.

"But surely I can——"

The protest was cut short.

"Y'cant. She's asleep an' ain't going t' be waked. We'll be back here in two days, and y' can see all y' want of her then. Now get off. Yes. Don't be silly, now—or I'll make y' pay for it when we come back."

His heavy hand seized the visitor's shoulders and thrust him towards the rail with a persistent but not violent pressure.

"Can't I leave a note—a line—?

"Y'can't! Y'can wait two days. I'll tell her y'came out."

"Only two days——?"

"Get out—go on! Haven't I told y' and told y'?" Cap'n Whelan was beginning to puff with indignation, and Summers decided not to cause another quarrel. After his former experience he could appreciate that Cap'n Whelan was behaving with a restraint which augured well for the future. If that future could be made safe by two days' delay it would be folly to irritate the old tyrant.

"All right," he agreed, though crestfallen. "But you'll be sure to tell her?"

"Yes! Yes!" grunted Cap'n Whelan, and Summers had to be content with that. He knew that Tina would understand when she learned that he had come straight off to the brig at four in the morning.

The canoe took him away. Cap'n Whelan inflated his pouchy cheeks. No compunction moved in him. The ninny was a menace to Samuel, and had been disposed of. He was pleased with a neat piece of work. He wasn't so old and silly as they'd all thought. When the kid first came he'd vowed he would show them. Wasn't he doing it?

Down in the cabin Tina awoke for no reason that she knew. The noises above and the change from motion to steadiness had not disturbed her, but now she found herself sitting up in the bunk, wits alert and eyes wide.

"Netherlandia!"

She knew it in a flash. Peering through the glass of the closed port she saw dark water, stars, and a dim smudge of land. Within her range of vision there was nothing to identify the place, but her conviction was unshaken. A shiver of excitement ran through her. Why hadn't she been told? After the creaking movements of the day the brig seemed hushed and secretive. Her trembling hands found Samuel and lifted him to the other side of the bunk. She sprang out, threw a wrap about her shoulders and hurried across the black saloon up to the deck.

Finding herself in the midst of that familiar setting she stood spellbound, despite the instinctive knowledge by which she had been aroused. The brig did not seem to have moved. Li-Goon's, the ranges and the shadowy waters were there, as they had always been. She lived again in the haven of her thoughts. It came to her suddenly that she had never been away—that the run to the Redemption Group was a dream from which she had awakened to this blessed relief. Fantastic doubts beseiged her. If she had dreamed, when had reality ceased? There was a fog of darkness on the quiet deck and fogs of sleep still hung in her wind. She was bewildered. Was she awake now? Her hand groped for the woodwork of the scuttle. She held it tightly, finding a steadying influence in the contact with something substantial.

Cap'n Whelan, huge and dim as this shadow had been at dinner, evolved before her.

"Ah, y'waked up, miss?"

She spoke with hushed agitation, astonishment still dominating every emotion and excluding anger or indignation.

"Yes, that's right," Cap'n Whelan agreed in a matter of fact way. "Yes, Netherlandia. Didn't expect t' be in here, but passed the Dutch boat an' she signaled she'd left the mail here 'stead of Tudoopa. Put back. Run in. Mate's ashore now getting the letter."

Tina scarcely listened. She felt dizzy. All this did not matter about Dutch boats and putting in. Questions thronged to her lips, yet when she tried to speak she could only say: "I—but——" weakly, as if she had no breath.

"I'd have called y' only——"

The pause chilled her. "Only—only what?"

"Me—try t'keep me nose out of yer business," he said stolidly. "Don't want t' worry about yer affairs. But reckon yer interests here is the young feller. All right. That was why I didn't call y'."

"What was——?" cried Tina, tormented by his slowness. Her bare foot stamped on the deck, but she was afraid that he would go on—she did not want to hear.

"Van Rossen—he come off o' course as soon as we got in. Yes. He was telling me that the young feller had gone. Yes—gone."

His hands moved clumsily as if to convey that the young fellow had swum away.

"Gone——?" Tina questioned slowly, but she had heard well enough. Each throb of her heart repeated: Gone! Gone! Gone!

"Ay. Quit drinking and went sudden. Didn't say much. No. Van Rossen—he fig'r'd the young feller had gone back t' England. Just as well—doing no good fer himself here. Better." His head wagged, approving the departure.

"I don't believe it——!" Tina declared in a sob, but she did. She knew now she had expected this.

"No?" said Cap'n Whelan, unmoved. "Gone away all the same."

He shut his hands one upon the other in his manner when a point was made and nothing remained to be said. Nagashima, drifting by, paused and pointed towards the shore.

"Sir, Mr. Carrington," he reported, and melted into the night.

The master's interest was distracted. He moved methodically to the rail and discovered the returning boat. Good! Dawn was near. As soon as the light was strong enough they'd shove along. He hoped there would be good news, for money mattered more than ever these days with Samuel's future to be remembered.

Tina—her fingers twined together, her arms hanging loose, her head drooping—felt drugged and vacant. A few stark thoughts possessed her, recurring and all-powerful. Johnnie had gone. He had not failed her. The fault was hers. She did not hate him. She only hated Tina and life. He had gone. To weep was idle; the bravery of a smile was idle. He had gone. It was finished. He had gone.

Dry lipped and dry eyed she leaned against the scuttle, unconscious of time. The light crept out of the east. It came pale and thin, drawing in with secret strokes shore, sea and ship so that they grew unnoticed out of the blackness. The bustle of departure did not disturb her; she did not hear the shouts, the patter of running feet, the complaints of blocks, the crying of the wind. Her wrap blown closely about her she remained still and white, like a corpse propped up there and forgotten. The sky began to flush. For no apparent reason she stirred suddenly. Another day? Without a glance at empty Netherlandia Tina went below to the dead, dark cabin where she sat among the clothes tumbled on the chair and looked at Samuel, whom she did not see.

ences to his wife and his garden. She had liked them and him so much that she had not remembered to be surprised because he came to her desk so often. Unlike most of the other men she saw daily, he had no business reason for these frequent visits. His department was not one that needed much of Van Alt's attention. Indeed, he and Van Alt had had only two business interviews since Mamie took her new post: and this was during her first month. It was then that Kingsbury had first seen her, had been introduced to her and had chatted for a moment.

And here eyes were not entirely opened until, quite suddenly one day, she saw tears in Kingsbury's eyes as he looked at her. There had been nothing in the situation to make him weep. Indeed, she had just laughed a little at something he had said, throwing back her bobbed head as she did so in a characteristic gesture which was rather taking, though she didn't know it. It was when she straightened again that she saw the tears. He made no effort to conceal them, nor did he seem self-conscious.

"I deliberately tried to make you do that," he confessed. "I often make you do it. Some day I'll tell you why."

He got up then and departed with a friendly nod, and Mamie, left alone, took her head in her hands and stared down at her brown desk blotter. She had received a shock—a really unpleasant shock. She had immensely admired and respected Kingsbury. She had let him see that she did. She had been as frank, as unself-conscious, with him as she might have been with a woman his age. It had been a rather wonderful experience. It must be remembered that Mamie—no, Mary—had never had a boy friend or a man friend. She had not analyzed this new association. It had seemed too natural a one to analyze. She had not realized that at last she had a friend, but subconsciously she must have thought she had. She knew this now by the upheaval she was going through.

She heard the door open and she straightened quickly. Kingsbury entered again, and she felt her body stiffen.

"For several weeks," he began, with the first self-consciousness he had shown, "I've been trying to find courage to ask you something."

"Yes?"

It was all she could say.

"Yes. I've wanted to ask if you would come out to us some Sunday and see our garden and lunch with us. I'd like to have you meet my wife. You might bring that nice old nurse of yours, Praise-ever, isn't it?—a fascinating name—if you don't like to leave her alone."

"O, thank you, I couldn't bring her," she faltered, hardly knowing what she said.

"All right, then, come without her. Why not come next Sunday? I will bring you a formal invitation from my wife tomorrow, so that everything will be done in proper order."

Mamie was both reassured and puzzled. "Everything done in proper order"—that was an odd way to put it. And yet——

"Thank you. I—I'm not sure that I can get away," she hesitated.

"Think it over," he said kindly. "You can tell me tomorrow, when I bring you the note." He had not sat down this time, and now he turned toward the door. "But I do hope you'll come," he added in a low voice as he left the office.

Mamie's head swam. Perhaps it was all right. Surely a man wouldn't ask a girl to come out to see his garden and meet his wife if there was anything wrong—at least, a man like Kingsbury wouldn't. And yet—those tears, and those intent looks, and that odd voice just now—She would think it over.

"I shall be glad to come out to lunch on Sunday," she said pleasantly, and was surprised by the flash in his eyes as he thanked her. This was after he had given her his wife's letter—a formal note seconding her husband's invitation. Now he also produced a round trip ticket to the suburban town near which he lived. Evidently he had experienced no doubts of her acceptance of the invitation.

"The eleven-forty train is an express" he told her. "That will get you to Hinsdale at half-past twelve, in plenty of time to freshen up and see the garden before lunch, which we have at half past one."

"Thank you. I'll take the eleven-forty," Mamie said. She was in for it now, headed straight for the lion's den, and her mind was confused. At moments she felt that she was making a mountain out of an anthill.

"I'll meet you at the station in our humble roadster" Kingsbury told her, blithely unconscious that he had made her a battlefield of doubts; and he left the office so buoyantly that Van Alt, meeting him on the threshold, observed his manner.

"What have you been doing to him?" he asked curiously. "He's merry as a grig. I haven't seen Kingsbury that way since——"

Some one else came into the office just then, and Mamie didn't have to explain what she had done.

She did not see Kingsbury again till he met her on the station platform at Hinsdale the following Sunday noon. He was alone, and after warmly shaking hands, he at once led her to his little roadster. She saw that he was very nervous.

"I want to warn you," he began as soon as the car started, "not to mind if my wife seems a little—well—unusual just at first. It will be all right, and I will explain everything to you later on."

Mamie's heart sank. She had whipped herself up to anything that might happen after she came. But just what did this mean?

"If anything is wrong I'd better go back," she suggested.

"Not a bit of it," said Kingsbury. "And nothing is wrong—except what I think you can help to put right." He removed a hand from the wheel and laid it on hers. "You will understand," he quietly told her. "You are very intuitive."

Mamie was beginning to feel that she was too intuitive.

"If Mrs. Kingsbury doesn't expect me, or has changed her mind about wanting me to come," she said quietly, "I should like to go back to the station."

"Nothing like it," Kingsbury assured her, his manner natural again. "It's all right. You'll see."

But at first Mary didn't see. All she saw, as they entered the hall of the Kingsbury's comfortable country home, was a small woman in black, with white hair, a ravaged middle-aged face, and a manner of extraordinary detachment, who extended a transparent hand, began a conventional greeting, and then suddenly stopped, stared at her and gasped out some incoherent sentence. Mr. Kingsbury paid no attention to this phenomenon.

"Better take Miss Wright up to her room, dear," he advised his wife. "She will want to powder her nose, I suppose, and then you and I will show her the garden before lunch."

He vanished through a side door, and Mrs. Kingsbury, who had been standing quite still on the spot where she had greeted the guest, pulled herself together with an obvious effort.

"Will you come upstairs?" she asked in an oddly level voice, and Mamie followed her with nerves humming.

Her hostess threw open a door leading to a bedroom and motioned the guest to precede her, and as she did so Mamie uttered a little cry of pleasure. The room was charming—all sunshine and gray chintz; and its two wide windows overlooked part of a ravishing garden.

"Will you make yourself quite at home?" Mrs. Kingsbury invited in her level tones. "You will find towels and powder and hair pins in the bathroom—there."

She indicated a connecting door as she spoke, Mamie passed through it, conscious as she did so that her hostess had dropped into a big chair with the effect of one whose knees failed to support her. She had known that from that moment in the hall Mrs. Kingsbury's eyes had never left her.

But when, after the hurried freshening her journey had made necessary, she returned to the bedroom, the manner of her hostess was more natural.

Kingsbury was waiting for them in the garden, and the next hour was a normal and beautiful one, broken only by one unusual incident. The host, now obviously in excellent spirits, was showing off his garden with such pride that his wife felt called on to apologize.

"He is bragging like a schoolboy," she said in her detached way. "Don't mind that. He never does it anywhere else."

She had spoken without emphasis or interest, as she always spoke, but Mr. Kingsbury looked so crestfallen that Mamie threw back her bobbed head and her characteristic little laugh gurgled forth. At the sound Mrs. Kingsbury started and stopped short in the path where they were walking. Mamie hardly noticed this. She had bent now to read the inscription on an old English sundial, but when she straightened she saw an unusual tableau. Mrs. Kingsbury was still standing motionless in the path, staring at her, and Mr. Kingsbury, motionless too, was watching his wife with an extraordinary intentness. In his eyes were tears, as Mamie had seen them a few days before. The picture held only an instant. Then Mrs. Kingsbury slipped her arm through Mamie's and silently led her onward along the path.

Mamie glanced back at her host. His shuttered face was alight as she had never seen it before.

"What a lovely place," she sighed. "What a place to come back to, every night, from the city!"

"I can't really take it in yet," Mrs. Kingsbury suddenly told her husband in a voice that for the first time had changed from its even level. "It dazes me. But—it's very wonderful."

She still held Mamie's arm as they sat side by side on the stone bench, and now for an instant her pressure on its deepened. Then she rose.

"I must see how our luncheon is getting on," she told Mamie in her former level tones. "Bring her in ten minutes from now," she told her husband as she walked away.

Mamie watched the slender figure passing under the trees. There was something wraithlike about it. Then she turned to Mr. Kingsbury, who was watching it, too.

"Do you begin to understand," he asked, without taking his eyes from his wife's departing figure.

"Not clearly—but, of course, I can see that you are both in some great trouble. I wish I could help," she impulsively added.

"You can. In fact, I think you are probably the only person in the world who can. Now, I'll tell you all about it. I want you to grasp the whole situation."

The story he told her was familiar enough in the beginning. The Kingsbury's only daughter, Mary, about Miss Wright's age, had died very suddenly a little more than two years ago, after three days' illness, of pneumonia. The shock to her parents had been frightful, had prostrated them both for a time. Then Mr. Kingsbury had been able to take up up his work and go on. Mrs. Kingsbury had not.

"So far as actual living is concerned," Kingsbury told Mamie, "my wife died the day Mary did. She has never shed one tear since then, nor has she ever smiled. So far as we can see she had not experienced human emotion of any kind. She goes through the gestures of living. She breathes, she eats, she speaks, she sleeps a little, but nothing touches her. It isn't melancholia. In some ways it might be simpler if it were. There's nothing the matter with her mind. It's a case of a broken heart; and if it goes on she will die in a year or two. She is losing ground steadily.

"We had been an unusually devoted couple, she and I," he went on with a sigh, "but since Mary went I've been simply a shadow to my wife, like all other human beings. I lost her the day I lost Mary. Our son lost his mother as well as his sister. My wife appears as unconscious of him as she is of me. She speaks to us, sees us, but she doesn't care whether we're around or not. It's pretty hard on him. I often wonder how he bears it. He's 25, and old enough and successful enough to make a home of his own, but he stands by. He has always adored his mother, and, fortunately, he's fond of me.

"He's playing golf today, but he'll be home for luncheon. It will be a

Things New and Old About The Bible :

By W. P. KING
Pastor First Methodist Church. Athens. Ga

Jesus the Way, the Truth, and the Life.

THERE needs to be set forth a few introductory considerations. Jesus in this three-fold description as the Way, the Truth, and the Life is a perfect expression of the thought and will of God the Father.

The contribution which Jesus Christ presents to human thought is the most profound, the most interesting and the most far-reaching that has appealed to the human mind. "He is the mightiest among the mighty, the holiest among the holy, and with His pierced hand, He has lifted empires off their hinges and turned the stream of centuries from its channel."

Men are led to faith in Christ along different paths. He is not only a revelation of Divinity but a perfect embodiment of humanity so that He makes His appeal to every variety of human temperament.

There are some who are led to loyalty to Jesus, through consideration of His character. There is the perfect combination of contrasted qualities. He is strong and gentle, holy and compassionate. He is meek and lowly in spirit, and yet with a high self-estimate which says, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." "I am the Resurrection and the Life." He possesses more than a prophet's indignation against sin and yet He was the companion and friend of sinners. He is the Supreme Head of humanity and is also accessible to the lowliest among men.

Among the greatest of the Old Testament characters, there are none who can compare with His moral and spiritual grandeur.

In the New Testament, there is no apostle nor Saint that can lay claim to His perfect sinlessness.

Dr. George A. Gordon writes: "The Gospels bear witness to one without predecessor and without successor, whose originality of character is declared in the paradoxical but luminous words of one of the greatest New Testament writers as "without father, without mother, without geneology, having neither beginning of days nor end of life—a new type of human being, to which the coming world is to be conformed."

There are those who are led to Jesus by the unique grandeur and originality of His teaching.

First. His message is marked by a new fresh insight. The Kingdom of God is spiritual in its nature. The fatherhood of God is made the central doctrine. Jesus shows the dark hideousness of sin, the freedom of forgiveness and the supreme value of man.

Second. There is the range and universality of the teaching of Jesus. He was an Oriental but appeals to the western mind. His words find response among savage tribes and the most highly civilized nations. The simplest minds and most cultured intellects are alike comforted and strengthened by His words.

Third. There is the finality of His teachings. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My word shall not pass away."

Fourth. There is the vitality of His message. His words are spirit and life, and pour iron into the blood. St. Paul testifies, "I can do all things through Him that strengtheneth me."

Fifth. Jesus exemplified His own teaching. There was no disharmony between His life and His doctrine.

Sixth. The teachings of Jesus meet the progmatic test. He submits His teachings to the practical test, "By their fruits, ye shall know them." Every other system of thought has been shaken. It has been said that His name alone came out of the World war untarnished. Agnosticism, atheism, materialism, militarism, positivism and rationalism have all been weighed in the balance and found wanting. In Him is the only hope of a new social order. In Him is the only hope of saving and stabilizing the world.

Some find their way to spiritual salvation through the cross of Christ.

"When I survey the wondrous Cross
On which the Prince of Glory died,
My richest gain, I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride."

The impression is not to be received that the Cross does not enter into the faith of all Christians, but that some are first attracted to Christ by the Cross.

The convincing evidence of the most potent influence in attracting other types of mind to Christ is the realization of His power in the world and in the lives of men today. The fact is that no events of the past in connection with Jesus, whatever the weight of the historical evidence, would very long hold any sway over the minds of men, if He were doing nothing in the world today.

We are not to infer, however, from the different approach to Christ of different temperaments, that the Christian life is not to appropriate a measure of all the wealth of the Christian faith.

"I am the way the truth and the life." We must beware of lopsidedness. To merely stress religion as a way as conduct, as morality, and to omit the element of truth and life is to reduce religion to the coldness of an iceberg. William Watson describes this type in a picture of the church:

"Outwardly splendid as of old;
Inwardly sparkles dull and cold;
Her strength and fire all spent and gone,
Like the dead moon, she still shines on."

There are others who emphasize the truth. With these Christianity is merely a doctrine, while conduct and experience are largely overshadowed. A rigid dogmatism has very little attraction.

There is yet a third class who make of religion a spiritual experience, an emotional glow, a religious fervor, while the truth is a vague shadow and conduct and morality are shifting and hazily defined.

A mystical type of piety without definite doctrine and without an authoritative code of morality falls easily into antinomianism, and a sudden descent is frequently made from the thrill of an unguided religious fervor to the thrill of an unrestrained sensuality.

Dr. William Pierson Merrill makes a discriminating and comprehensive statement. "No, religion must be all three—a Way, a Truth, a Life. A Christianity which is only the way becomes ethical culture; a Christianity which is only the truth becomes dogmatism; a Christianity which is only the life becomes mysticism. Each is imperfect. Just as water must have its two atoms of hydrogen and one atom of oxygen, and they must blend, or there is no water; so way, and truth, and life, conduct belief, and spiritual experience, must blend, or there is no Christianity, no true religion. We need and must have, way, and truth and life. The way lighted by the truth, and traveled by the life; the truth set aglow by the life, and opening into the way; the life, informed by the truth, and guided the way—that is religion, and nothing less can be."

"BLOOD MONEY" was plainly designed for those individuals who are never happier than when scared out of their wits. I must say that this mystery play remains a little more logical and sensible than most of these harrowing affairs and I suppose all in all it's as good a one of its kind as you can expect.

All of the familiar mystery play landmarks are duly present in "Blood Money." There's a brown envelope containing one hundred thousand dollars that has a way of disappearing every odd moment or so. There's the trusted chauffeur who turns out to be —you'll never guess—a crook! They have the usual unfunny Japanese valet. Then in the first act there sweeps onto the stage a fetching brunette lady wearing a cloth of gold turban and long earrings. You know from experience such a get-up unquestionably means she's the villainess. Never for one moment dream of wearing a gold turban and long earrings unless you mean to imply you're planning dirty work at the crossroads.

For only a day did Mrs. Charlie Sims stay in New York. She was here on her way to Worcester to see her niece, Dorothy Heyward, get married. And as the wedding is fully a month off I am left with nothing to think but that Mrs. Sims either wanted to be sure of a good seat at the church or else she ran up ahead to help Dorothy run a few ribbons in things.

Frank Meador was here for a few days and out at Oyster Bay you could find him with his wife, Willie, his daughter, Charlotte, his son-in-law, George Fletcher, and his grand-sons, "Pete" and Bill. And since Mrs. Fletcher, Sr. was also present, it is really a pity that nobody had a Brownie No. 2 along to snap this group.

No matter what the new season brings forth, it is doubtful if anything more terrible than "Behind the Footlights" will come along. This is one of those musical comedies within a musical comedy and we are privileged, rather compelled, to see what really goes on "behind the scenes." The high point of the evening was reached when one of the characters in the "inner" play said, "This show is certainly a flop" and instantly the entire audience broke into the only spontaneous applause of the night.

Ever so often these distressing shows are acted by really fine actors just as on some occasions an excellent play will be killed by inferior playing. The most satisfying thing about "Behind the Footlights," however, is that the actresses and actors engaged to perform it are equally as dreadful as the show.

I saw Ben Lyon at lunch the other day and he told me that much as he regretted it, all of his future pictures would be taken in Hollywood. He'll be in his adored New York a few days longer after having just returned from a summer in Europe. While there he not only had a grand time but acted in a foreign picture as well.

Ben is not the only one of the movie heart-breakers whom I've seen lately. William Haines, speaking in a not-to-be-mistaken southern accent, was here a few days back on his way to West Point, where exteriors for his next pictures will be filmed. Then, of course, Richard Barthelmess was here and it seems Katherine Wilson heard he was. John Gilbert passed through only to whisk his new leading lady aboard and then on to Washington. And this leading lady in case you did not know, happens to be none other than Jeanne Eagels.

It used to be that no prominent actress would ever "follow" another prominent actress in a part. She either had to originate it herself, or there'd be nothing doing. However, we now find so well-known an actress as Grace George agreeing to do the Jane Cowl part in "The Road to Rome" Chicago company. The company here headed by Miss Cowl won't be allowed to leave New York for many months yet.

And on the Pacific coast we find Elsie Janis quite willing to play the part in "Oh Kay!" that Gertrude Lawrence originated in New York and is now playing in London. The popular "Hit the Deck" with Louise Groody in it is doing so well it'll be a long time before it closes, so Queenie Smith, equally well-known, and to my mind far better, will play Miss Groody's part in the Chicago company. We even find Emily Stevens, one of "Broadway Banter's great favorites," playing Lynn Fontainne's part in "The Second Man," while that latter lady is disporting herself in Europe for a few weeks.

wonderful experience for him to find a young, cheerful person in the house again. We haven't been able to have any one here since Mary died. My wife couldn't stand it. I had to insist on having you. Do you know why I did it?"

"No."

"Because, by one of life's strange tricks," he went on, "you look so much like our Mary that you might be her twin sister. Every feature is like hers. Your figure is like hers. Your walk is like hers. Your hair is lighter than hers, and she hadn't the little widow's peak you have; but your trick of throwing back your head and laughing is exactly like hers. Every time I hear it it bowls me over. You saw the effect it had on her mother just now.

"Of course, I saw the resemblance the first moment I saw you. I've been watching and studying you all these months, afraid to make the experiment of having you meet my wife, afraid that the essence of you might be so different from Mary's that my wife wouldn't see the resemblance of the body, or would resent it if she did see it. But, thank God, it isn't! You are like Mary in many ways—in your innate sweetness, in your sense of humor, and in your kindness of heart. I believe—and the specialists I have consulted lately agree with me—that if you would consent to be our friend, and if you would come out often and spend week-ends and holidays with us, you would give my wife an interest that would eventually pull her back to life.

For a moment Mamie could not speak. She told herself that she owed this man all he asked and more.

"I will do everything I can," she said at last. "You may count on me."

"Thank you. I was sure I could. Don't make any obvious effort. Just be yourself. Let all the advances to friendship come from her. She will make them—I was sure of that from the moment she took your arm in the garden. I was so anxious to have you entirely natural and at ease that I didn't dare to explain matters before you came. I was afraid it might make you a little stiff or self-conscious. And my wife must not suspect that we are experimenting on her. That would undo half our good work. Now we'll go in to luncheon."

A big young man in golf clothes, who looked like his father, met them in the hall and concealed with difficulty his surprise at encountering a strange young woman in his home. During the meal this surprise obviously changed to approval, which later he expressed when, after some maneuvering, he got Mamie off into a corner of the living room.

"Glad you're coming back for the week-end," he said heartily. "Do you play golf? Fine! We'll have a round next Saturday if I can sneak away from the mater long enough. I can see already that the plan dad told me about after luncheon is working out all right."

For it had been settled that Mamie was to come again the following Saturday noon and stay till Monday morning. The invitation was not given till the last minute, when Mrs. Kingsbury had suddenly kissed Mamie good-by and was showing a pathetic disinclination to release her hand. But her initiative was dormant and Mr. Kingsbury came to her aid.

"Why don't you ask Miss Wright to leave the hot city and come down to us for a week-end?" he said, and Mrs. Kingsbury took up the suggestion at once.

"Could you?" she asked almost eagerly. "Some week-end quite soon? Could you come this next Saturday?"

It was settled as easily as that, and this was only the beginning.

That evening Mamie told Praise-ever the whole story. She foresaw some lonely Sundays for Praise-ever, and she was right. Praise-ever spent her week-ends without Mamie that summer.

"I understand why dad and mother are so crazy about you," Warren Kingsbury, Jr., told Mamie on the golf links a month later. "It's because they think you look exactly like Mary. So you do, in a way—but you don't make me think of Mary. You make me think of you. You look like yourself, and you are yourself, and not Mary; and you've got to promise right now that you will never be a sister to me!"

Mamie laughed and promised, and then sent her golf ball into a bunker and took four strokes to get it out.

It was three months more before she made her next promise which was to marry Warren junior the following spring. Even the specialists conceded that Mrs. Kingsbury was on the high road to complete recovery, and she was obviously helping the courtship all she could. But the courtship itself had not been one of those whirlwind affairs we read about. Warren junior seemed quite a casual lover.

"Wouldn't it save a lot of commuting if you lived here right along?" he asked one day, with a grin. "You can marry me and do it, if you like. I suppose we'll have to keep on living here with mother, since she's so obsessed about you—"

"I'd love that," Mamie said, soberly, and felt rather disappointed by the manner of this wooing. Then suddenly she found herself picked up from the floor and enveloped in an embrace that left her breathless—and no longer disappointed.

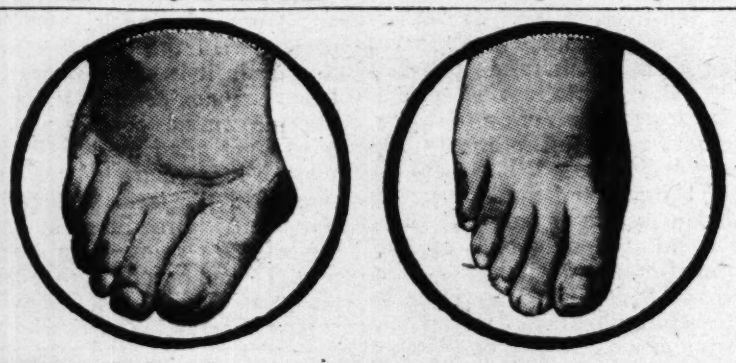

"I will say Mr. Kingsbury and his son is a little better than most of them," Praise-ever remarked after she had been formally installed as a member of the new household and had thus studied the situation at close range. "An' their objeck was matrimony, so that part of it is all right. But your danger ain't over yet, Mamie—no, Mary. Married women is pursued, too!"

What Has Happened to Justice?

Swiggin had been marked for death.

The police naturally sought to question Capone about this matter. But Scarface was nowhere to be found.

In the meanwhile prominent business men prepared to investigate the murder. Harry E. Kelly, president of the Union League club, urged a special grand jury with a special state's attorney to clean up the city, arguing that State's Attorney Crowe could not do the job as his hands were "politically tied."

"What I would like to see," said Kelly, "is a real investigation into the whole crime situation, with particular emphasis on the immunity gunmen seem to enjoy, and also into the ballot frauds.

"Banditry, with its accompanying murders almost daily in the streets of Chicago, can be stopped at once if we can have a thorough investigation that will tear away the protection the criminal element now enjoys and lay bare the machinery of politics and crime that dovetail into each other."

The seller of the Thompson machine gun was seized on April 30, but he refused to talk. This man, Alex V. Koreck, a hardware dealer, told the police that if he told them anything he would die.

"I sold those fellows one gun and they said they'd kill me if I didn't get the others," he said. "Then when they got them they swore they'd take me for a ride if I ever squawked about them." He said he had sold three.

The uproar assumed impressive proportions but brought no particular results in ensuing weeks. Late in May it was reported that Capone had "made overtures" to the state's attorney's office regarding his surrender, but nothing came out of this, until July 28, when he gave himself up.

Capone was charged with violating the prohibition law and released on $5,000 bail. Then Chief of Detectives William Schoemaker arrested him for the murder of McSwiggin. Capone, it was said, had been sojourning at Gary, Ind., and had surrendered at the Indiana-Illinois state line. He denied that he had anything to do with machine-gunning.

On July 29 the day after his surrender, the accused man was brought before Chief Justice Lynch, who dismissed the murder warrant when the state's attorney's office reported that it did not have evidence to support the charge. Capone was released, and again he disappeared, the general theory being that he feared assassination.

"It is only a question of time until some shotgun slugs are thrown in his direction," his attorney remarked. "I wouldn't ride in the same automobile with him."

the embrocation and started to go out of doors.

"Sit at home a little," said my mother, "you will rub off the embrocation."

I explained to her that it had already sunk in. Thus I took up once more my life of liberty with my merry companions. Again I could devote more time to my singing.

Unfortunately, I had learned to write fairly well at school, and this circumstance spoiled life for me.

"Nothing good will come of you, boy," said my father. "You have fooled about long enough. You write a good hand. Sit down at the table and write me out two or three sheets every day! It will soon be time for you to go with me to the Ouprava."

I sat down as I was bid. It was a tormentingly dull task, writing incomprehensible words in a careful hand, when my whole soul was in the streets, where the other boys were at play.

The Care of the Skin - - - -

By Helen Woodruff

"A woman is never too old or too young to consider beauty," says an old French proverb.

Because beauty means the sparkle and vivacity of perfect health, even very young girls should heed their "beauty hints."

If your nose or chin or forehead doesn't measure up to all the specifications, you have no cause to worry. A clear skin, rosy cheeks, red lips and sparkling eyes will ake almost any set of features attractive, and these are the things that every girl can have if she will work for them.

With the magazines and store windows full of advertisements for all sorts of "miraculous" creams and lotions, girls are very apt to get the idea that a complexion can be bought with cash. It can be bought, but not with money. Hard work and good sense make the complexion. Preparations put on the outside have very little effect.

The Skin and Health.

The skin of the face is the barometer of the body. If it is muddy and rough there is something wrong. Usually that something is your habits. Ask yourself these questions:

Do you sit around and read while the other girls go out and play? Do you refuse to go swimming or to play tennis because you are not very good at it? Do you sit in a stuffy movie when you might be out-of-doors? Do you take a street car when you have only a few blocks to walk?

If you answer "yes" to all these queries, you may blame yourself for your poor complexion and you may be sure it will be worse in the far away day when you are thirty.

Exercise is the best skin tonic. Besides, it is lots of fun, and the more you take of it the more you will want. Sports are better than setting-up exercises when you are in your teens, because they give more chance for competition and excitement.

Drinking Water.

Drink plenty of water, both at and between meals. The habit of taking one glass at night and two in the morning can't be started too young. Incidentally it is good for lots of other things beside the complexion. It is one of the best ways of avoiding colds and similar ailments.

Of course, there have to be some "don'ts" in any collection of beauty suggestions. Here is one I know you won't like—"Don't eat too much candy." Sweets taste so good that it is hard to remember all of the unpleasant things they do to the complexion. Remember it will be better for your skin as well as for your allowance, if you pass by the candy counter without indulging your sweet tooth.

Cleanliness.

On the outside of the skin, cleanliness is the most important matter. The face is exposed to so much more dirt than the rest of the body that it should be washed more frequently. Plain, old-fashioned soap and water is the best cleanser. Any pure toilet soap is good for this purpose.

After washing the face in warm water rinse it in cold, until the pores are closed. If you have a very oily skin you may wipe your face with a cloth dipped in witch hazel once in a while. This helps to close the pores and to keep the skin from having an oily shine.

Summer sunburn and tan leave the skin dry and harsh. A mixture of rosewater and glycerine such as any druggist will prepare cheaply, will soothe the skin and make it softer.

Unless the skin is badly broken out, when you should consult a doctor, this is all the attention it needs. Elaborate preparations are more apt to injure than to help it.

Rouge and powder are unbecoming to the girl in her early teens. They clash with the natural freshness of youth and make the prettiest face look like a caricature. If you observe the health rules you will have plenty of color of your own.

WHAT STATE IS THIS?

Above is the outline map of a state or a Canadian province. Can you guess which one it is? The answer will be found elsewhere on this page.

Putting Your Head Through a Postcard

An elephant can't climb through the eye of a needle. And neither you will say, can a boy who wears a size six hat put his head through a hole in a postcard. But, as a matter of fact, he can, if he knows the trick.

It is better to take a piece of heavy paper, such as writing paper, than an actual post card, for the paper is easier to twist after the cuts have been made. Cut your paper the size of the card, then, following the lines in the diagram below, draw with a pencil two circles, ending them in the center with a short space between.

After you have cut on your lines, you will discover that your paper has extended itself into a circle composed of an inch-wide strip. It will easily pass over your head, like a necklace. Try it!

Patient: "Only when I try to spell it."

DENTAL DON'TS

"A tooth brush in time, saves nine," might be as good an axiom to repeat every day as the more familiar one, "a stitch in time, saves nine."

You would probably be more impressed with this fact if you had been sitting in a dentist's chair every day for weeks, submitting to the cruel grinding and drilling, to say nothing of the staggering blow of a bill running into hundreds of dollars. And all because a litttle girl was not told that, "a tooth brush in time, saves nine."

Dental Don'ts are being taught to children in school, and dentists themselves are trying to help educate the public to proper care of the teeth. Here are some of the rules they say must be followed if you wish to escape their chairs. They call them "Dental Don'ts."

1. Don't fail to brush your teeth daily.
2. Don't crack nuts with your teeth.
3. Don't eat candies and other rich food.
4. Don't pick your teeth with pins.
5. Don't fail to have your teeth examined regularly.

No Rust On Wits That Solve These

During the summer months you may have kept your brains from getting rusty by solving the riddles on the Boys' and Girls' page. If you have you can doubtless guess some of these.

126. It is not north or south or east and it unlocks doors. What city of the United States is it?—Tommy Elliott.

127. Why does the eldest son of the king of England have a sad name?—Mary Ann Mallet.

128. Why are washwomen sometimes displeased with the weather man?—Nellie Vermeuten.

129. Little Nancy Eddicote, in a white petticoat, the longer she rounds the shorter she grows. Who is she?—Annie Mae Beck.

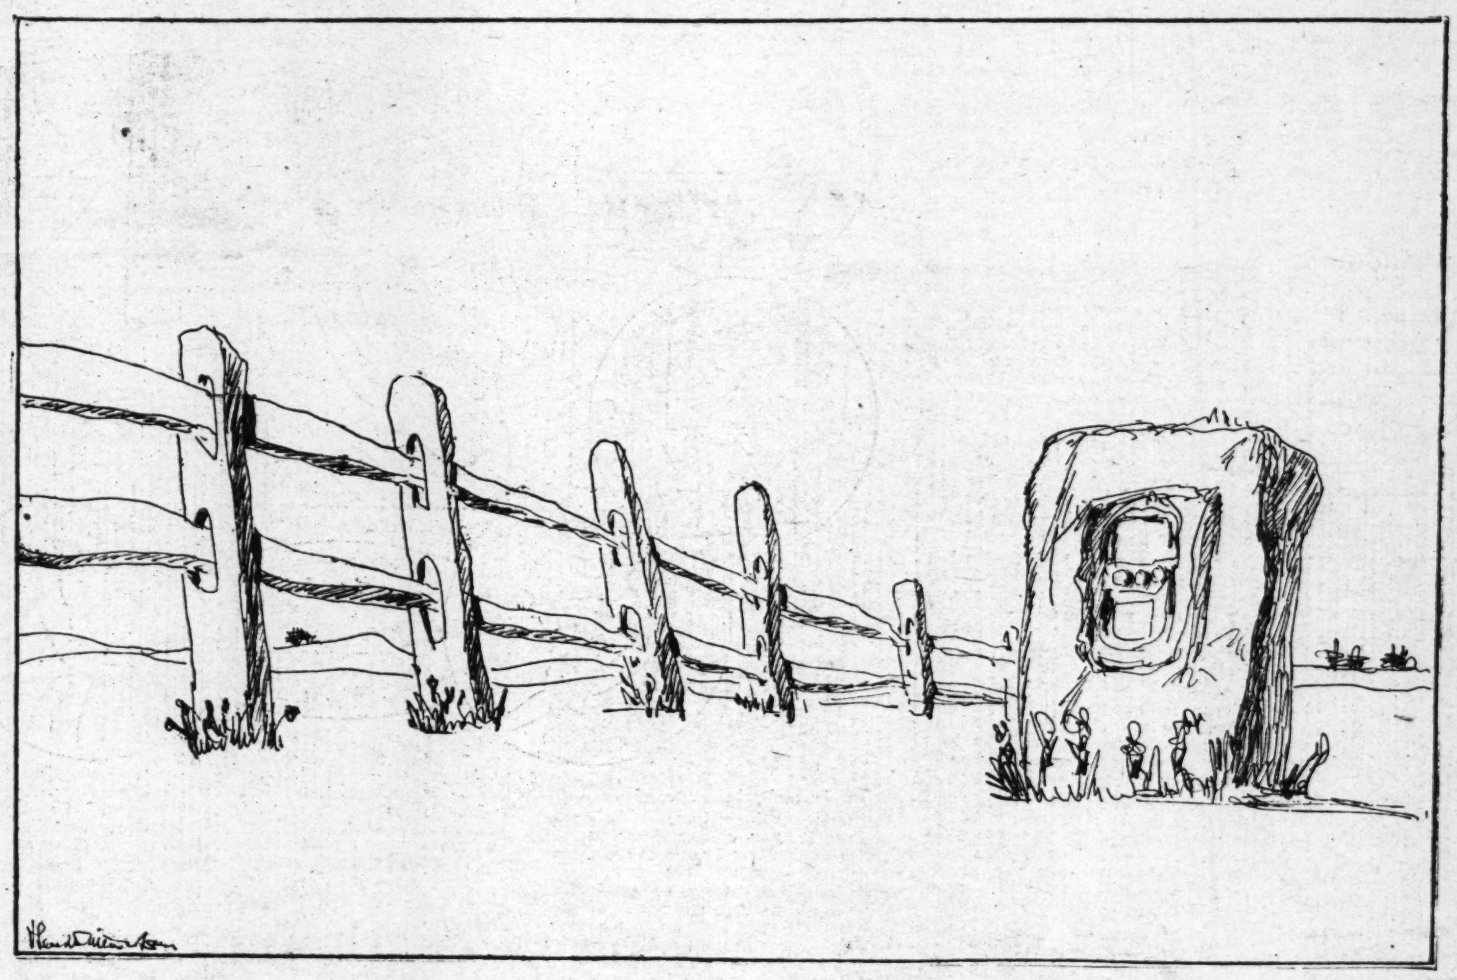

130. When is a boat like a heap of snow?—Beatrice Powers.

POSERS!

What is up to date is just as important as what is historical. You have to know both to make a perfect score on these posers.

1. What general said he would rather have written Gray's "Elegy" than have captured an impregnable fortress?
2. What type of plane did Lindbergh use for his New York-Paris flight?
3. Which state is known as the granite state?
4. For what gentile woman was a book of the Bible named?
5. Who built the first American locomotive?
6. Who was called the "Mother of Russia?"
7. The juice of what tree was used to poison a great philosopher?
8. What two baseball teams in the National league played a 22-inning game this season?

Famous Monuments — Mason and Dixon Line — By Hendrik Van Loon

Color Instructions

It almost seems that the further we are getting along with our work, the simpler the pictures are getting to be. And yet, if you color this story carefully, you will rather like the result.

The fence should be brown, as fences usually are, and the stone should be a light gray, as stones usually are, but if you are very ambitious you can color the coat-of-arms, only you must make it look as if it had been painted a hundred years ago and had weathered a great many storms.

Then a bit of grass and a few flowers at the base of the stone. And the same at the base of each of the fence posts. And a delicate line of blue following the mountain ridge.

Try that and you will have a picture that will remind you of the engravings of the middle of the eighteenth century and that is exactly the effect you should strive after.

POOR Mason and Dixon, who merely did an indifferent job of surveying that there might be an end to the fatal boundary disputes over two overlapping land-grants of His Most Generous Majesty the King of England.

As I said, poor Mason and Dixon, who did an honest piece of work and thought no more about it. They hardly knew what immortal fame would be in store for their humble and commonplace selves.

Nowadays when we hear the expression "Mason and Dixon Line" we think of the long preliminaries to the Civil War and of darkeys singing along the levee and of chivalrous Virginia colonels patting the curly heads of happy little pickaninnies and a sort of terrestrial paradise "south of Mason and Dixon" and rudely destroyed by the tramping feet of General Sherman's myriad soldiers.

But a hundred years ago the Mason and Dixon line was nothing more or less than a practical boundary line which showed once and for all where Maryland began and Pennsylvania ended and vice versa.

But it was more than a line on a surveyor's map. It was a succession of stone boundary marks which carried the arms of the two rival landholders on their two sides and which told the revenue officers of a Catholic and a Quaker community what was their legitimate field of activity and what was not.

These boundary marks by the way are among the oldest and the most interesting of human monuments. We have found them in spots where every other vestige of a bygone civilization has completely disappeared. They were in common use in Egypt and in the valley of the Euphrates. They are frequently mentioned by the historians of the wandering Jewish tribes who finally settled down in Palestine, and they tell us more of the old scripts used by the ancestors of the Norsemen than any other relics that have come down to us from the dawn of history.

And no wonder! In the first place, they had to be of respectable dimensions so that it would be impossible to remove them without a great ado of derricks and working men and attracting the attention of the neighbors. And in the second place as they played a very vital part in the community and were almost as important as an oath, they were played under the protection of the tribal gods and were an object that enjoyed almost divine respect and that must be treated with due regard and reverence.

And so they survived where much more elaborate and beautiful pieces of ancient stone carving have long since disappeared.

And even then, when their home has become a sacred myth (as in the case of Mason and Dixon line) they still patiently stand and perform a duty that has long since ceased to have any actual value.

The Fire at Sauer's Saw Mill

Another Conquerors Club Story

BY W. BOYCE MORGAN

SYNOPSIS.

On the first day of the Conquerors' club camping trip the four boys, with Ringer, their dog, rescue Mr. Sauers, a farmer, from the attack of a tramp who has been annoying him and his family. During their stay at camp, Bill becomes quite fond of Ruth Sauers, which gives the other three boys a chance to kid him. The Conquerors extend their stay at camp a day to help Mr. Sauers with his threshing. Leaving Ringer to guard their camp, they go to the farm early in the morning, to find that the tramp had killed all of Mr. Sauers' chickens. After a hard day's work Mr. Sauers goes to town to notify the sheriff, and during his absence the tramp sets fire to his saw mill in the woods. The boys fight the blaze, Bill saves Ruth's life when her dress catches fire, and Mr. Sauers and the sheriff arrive just when it looks as though the weary boys would lose the fight with the flames. They all return to the Sauers farm, and as the boys are about to start back to their tents, they hear the angry barking of Ringer. They at once decide that the tramp must be raiding their tents.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

INSTALLMENT V.

"Come on, boys," cried Sheriff Hixon. "Here's our chance to get him!" With a warning to Mr. Sauers to stay at the house in case the tramp should come there, the sheriff started at a run across the farm yard and toward the woods that led to the river. The four boys, spurred into activity now, in spite of their fatigue, by the knowledge that their camp was in danger, dashed after him.

As they hurried down the rough path the excited, angry barks of Ringer sounded louder and louder.

"If he hurts that dog," growled Porky, to whom the pet was especially dear, "I'll make him wish he'd never seen this county."

"Let's be quiet," cautioned the sheriff, leading the way with drawn revolver, "we'll steal up on him. You boys keep behind me, for he may be armed. If necessary, I'll shoot."

The moon which had lately risen threw its pale light on the woods, making it possible to see clearly. In a moment they were approaching their camp site, walking hurriedly but carefully, spurred on by the loud barking of their dog.

Bob, who was just behind Sheriff Hixon, suddenly uttered an exclamation.

"There's Ringer!" he cried. "But where's the tramp?"

They paused, gazing by the moonlight at a strange scene. At the bottom of a large tree at the edge of the clearing they saw Ringer. The dog was alternately growling with bared teeth, and emitting the loud barks that he knew would bring his masters. And just out of reach of his highest jumps, on a low limb of the tree, crouched the figure of a man.

"There he is!" exclaimed Bill. "Up in the tree! Ringer's captured him!" They ran forward.

"Come down out of there!" commanded the sheriff loudly. "And don't make a wrong move, or I'll shoot!"

"Call off your dog," came a whining, cowardly voice from the tree. "He's almost chewed me up."

Bob had run into the nearest tent and now reappeared with a flashlight, which he turned upward.

"It's the tramp, sure enough," he called, as the rays revealed the evil-looking face of the man they had beaten up on their first day in camp.

"Come on down," repeated the sheriff. "We've got the dog. We've got you, too, and we're going to keep you. And, believe me, you'll suffer plenty for this day's work."

While Porky held Ringer and tried to quiet the dog's growls the tramp gingerly climbed down from his perch. No sooner had he touched the ground than Sheriff Hixon had snapped a pair of handcuffs about his wrists.

"Say," came Porky's angry voice suddenly, "look at Ringer's head! It's all bloody."

The other boys ran to the dog, and found a trickle of blood running from a break in the skin on his head.

"The brute hit him with something!" said Bill hotly.

"Yes, and I wish I'd killed him!" snarled the tramp. "Look what he did to me."

In spite of their anger, the Conquerors could not restrain their

"'There he is,' exclaimed Bill. 'Up in the tree!'" away toward the house. When he was out of sight, four tired boys sank to the ground.

"Wow!" exclaimed Porky. "If this hasn't been a full day. Ringer, old boy, I guess you're some little tramp-catcher."

"It's me for bed, groaned Red, "and smiles as they gazed at the tramp's trousers. Evidently Ringer had got his teeth into them and started running, for they were ripped in the back from the belt to below the knee.

"Well, boys," said the sheriff, "I guess this ends the night's work. I'm going to take this fellow up to the Sauers' house and get Mr. Sauers to drive us into the village tonight. I'll have him behind bars within an hour. And I'll see that he stays there a good, long time."

A moment later, after thanking them for their help and bidding them goodbye, the sheriff pushed the tramp in front of him, and holding his gun to the prisoner's body, marched him off.

"If anybody wakes me before noon I'll throw him in the river. That is, all except Ringer. I'll spare him, because he's a good watch dog."

"Well, don't forget we have to break camp in the morning," said Bob, "and we've got a hike to the bus line if we want to get home."

"No, we haven't," contradicted Bill. "Mr. Sauers insists that he is going to take us home, baggage, tents and all, in his car. He says it's the least he can do after all we've done for him."

"Hooray!" yelled Red. "That certainly sounds better than walking to me."

It was well past noon of the following day when the little car of Mr. Sauers' pulled out of his farm yard and started on the drive toward the boys' homes. And how that car was loaded! All the things that the four boys had carried plus the four boys themselves and their dog, were piled in around and behind Mr. Sauers, who was at the wheel.

"Well, I certainly hate to see the Conquerors leave," said Mr. Sauers, as they sped along.

"And we all hate to go," replied Bob. Then he added mischievously, "However, I guess it's hardest of all on Bill. He seems to have been awfully fond of your farm, Mr. Sauers."

The farmer smiled.

"I was just telling Bill a minute ago," he said, "that I was planning to send Ruth into your town to school this fall. She'll stay with her aunt there. Bill didn't seem to mind."

"Well, well, well!" exclaimed Red. "Why, Bill, I can just see you and Ruth—"

"Ah, shut up!" growled Bill, with a happy grin.

THE END.

Something to Do

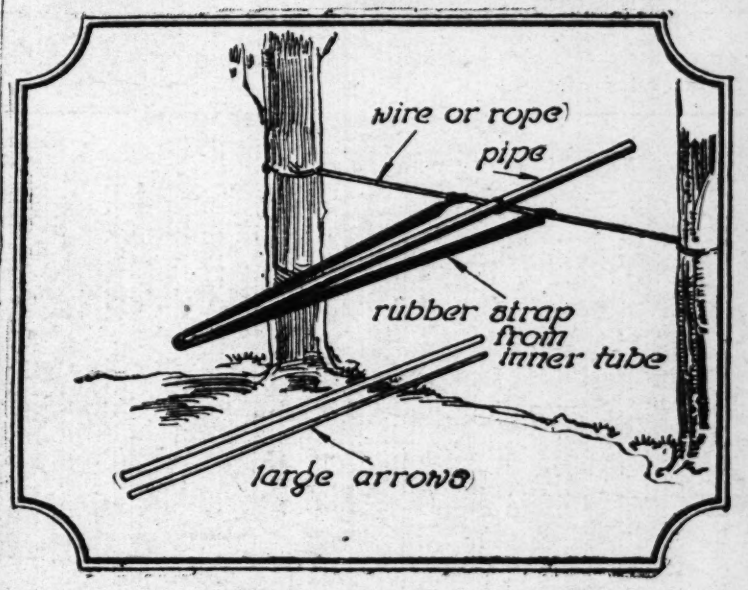

DALE R. VAN HORN

Here is a simple arrow gun that will shoot a 5-foot arrow for a hundred yards or more! It is easily made and as easily used as a bow and arrow, yet it is a veritable cannon. It is an ideal addition to the camp and you can mount it at a strategic point to guard the place against invasion. While waiting for the enemy to attack, however, you can set up a distant target and see who is the best shot.

To make the gun you will need a length of gas pipe about five feet long and 3-4 inch in diameter, a damaged automobile inner tube and some galvanized wire. Select two trees close together and wrap the wire about them as shown, then twist the wire about the pipe until it is held midway between them. Even though the pipe is held tightly, you will find that it can be moved up or down and from left to right. In fact it has all the range any aircraft gun of war-time use can boast.

Cut a two-inch strip of the rubber from the tube and attach it to each side of the gun so the doubled middle can be drawn back of the breech. Make arrows from any straight-grain wood—or peeled, smooth saplings, and you are ready for some fun!

You must of course be careful to shoot away from camp and be sure the target operator is out of range while firing. A pumpkin will make an excellent target.

Chapter 44—The Story of Milo, the Strong Man. By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD

IN ANCIENT GREECE THERE LIVED A MAN KNOWN AS MILO OF CROTON WHO WAS FAMOUS FOR HIS ALMOST SUPER-HUMAN STRENGTH. CROTON, HIS BIRTHPLACE, WAS ONE OF THE GREEK COLONIES IN ITALY. — •

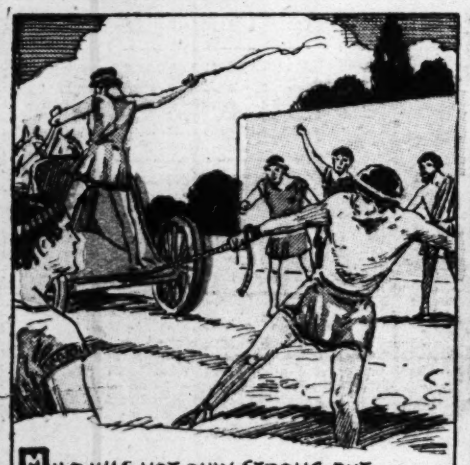

MILO'S METHOD OF TRAINING, WE ARE TOLD, WAS MOST UNUSUAL. EVERY DAY HE WENT FOR A WALK, CARRYING A CALF UPON HIS SHOULDERS. EACH DAY HE WOULD WALK A LITTLE FURTHER THAN HE HAD THE DAY BEFORE. — •

AS THE CALF GREW LARGER AND HEAVIER, MILO'S MUSCLES BECAME STRONGER AND ACCUSTOMED TO THE INCREASED WEIGHT. AS A RESULT, WHEN THE ANIMAL WAS FULL-GROWN, MILO COULD CARRY IT SEVERAL MILES WITH EASE

ONE TIME IN A TERRIFIC STORM, MILO AND SOME FRIENDS SOUGHT SHELTER IN A DESERTED FARMHOUSE. SUDDENLY THE FLIMSY STRUCTURE COLLAPSED. MILO CAUGHT THE ROOF AS IT FELL AND HELD IT UP UNTIL HIS COMPANIONS ESCAPED. THEN HE EXTRICATED HIMSELF FROM THE RUINS

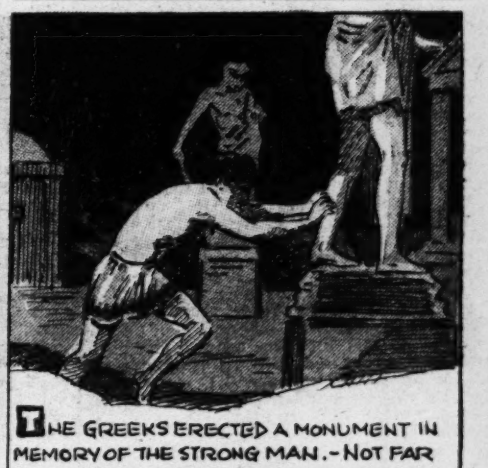

MILO WAS NOT ONLY STRONG BUT SKILLED IN SPORTS, AND WON MANY OF THE EVENTS IN THE OLYMPIC GAMES. ONE OF HIS FEATS WAS TO HOLD BACK A CHARIOT WITH ONE HAND WHILE A TEAM OF FOUR HORSES TRIED TO PULL IT. — •

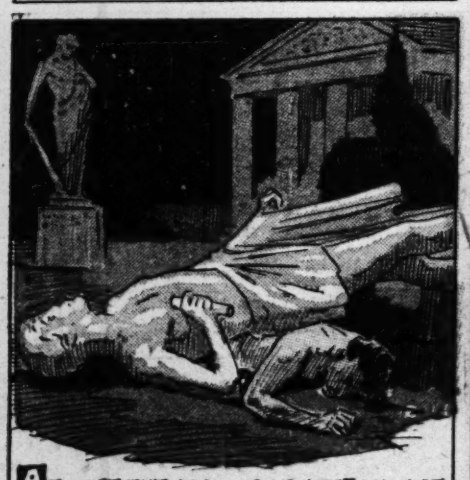

ONE DAY WHEN MILO WAS A VERY OLD MAN HE WANDERED ALONE INTO THE FOREST. COMING TO A CLEARING, HE FOUND A FALLEN TREE TRUNK THAT SOME WOODCUTTERS HAD BEGUN TO SPLIT. THINKING HIMSELF AS STRONG AS OF OLD, MILO TRIED TO TEAR THE TRUNK APART WITH HIS BARE HANDS.

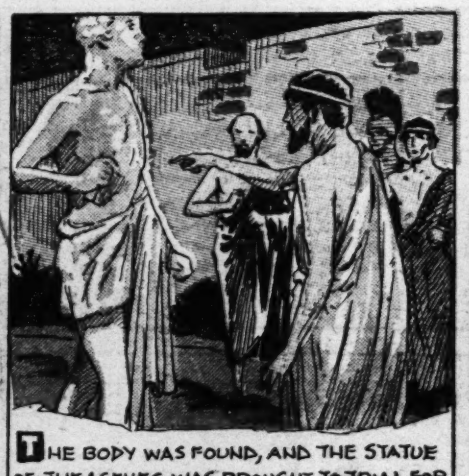

AT THE FIRST PULL, THE WEDGES FELL OUT, BUT THE TRUNK CLOSED ON HIS FINGERS AND THE OLD ATHLETE FOUND HIMSELF A HELPLESS PRISONER. NO ONE HEARD HIS FRANTIC CALLS FOR HELP AND, WHEN NIGHT CAME, THE UNLUCKY MILO WAS ATTACKED AND DEVOURED BY WILD BEASTS.

THE GREEKS ERECTED A MONUMENT IN MEMORY OF THE STRONG MAN.—NOT FAR FROM THE STATUE OF MILO STOOD THAT OF ANOTHER FAMOUS ATHLETE NAMED THEAGENES.—EACH NIGHT A MAN WHOM THEAGENES HAD BEATEN IN THE GAMES TRIED TO PUSH THE STATUE FROM ITS BASE.

AT LAST THE JEALOUS ATHLETE MANAGED TO DISLODGE THE IMAGE OF HIS RIVAL FROM ITS PEDESTAL, BUT THE HEAVY PIECE OF MARBLE FELL UPON HIM AND CRUSHED HIM TO DEATH. — •

THE BODY WAS FOUND, AND THE STATUE OF THEAGENES WAS BROUGHT TO TRIAL FOR MURDER AS THOUGH IT WERE A REAL PERSON. THE IMAGE WAS CONVICTED OF THE CRIME, AND THE JUDGE ORDERED IT TO BE THROWN INTO THE SEA. — •

SHORTLY AFTER THE SENTENCE HAD BEEN CARRIED OUT, GREECE WAS VISITED BY A GREAT PLAGUE. THE ORACLE DECLARED THAT THE EPIDEMIC WOULD NOT CEASE UNTIL THE STATUE WAS RESTORED. — •

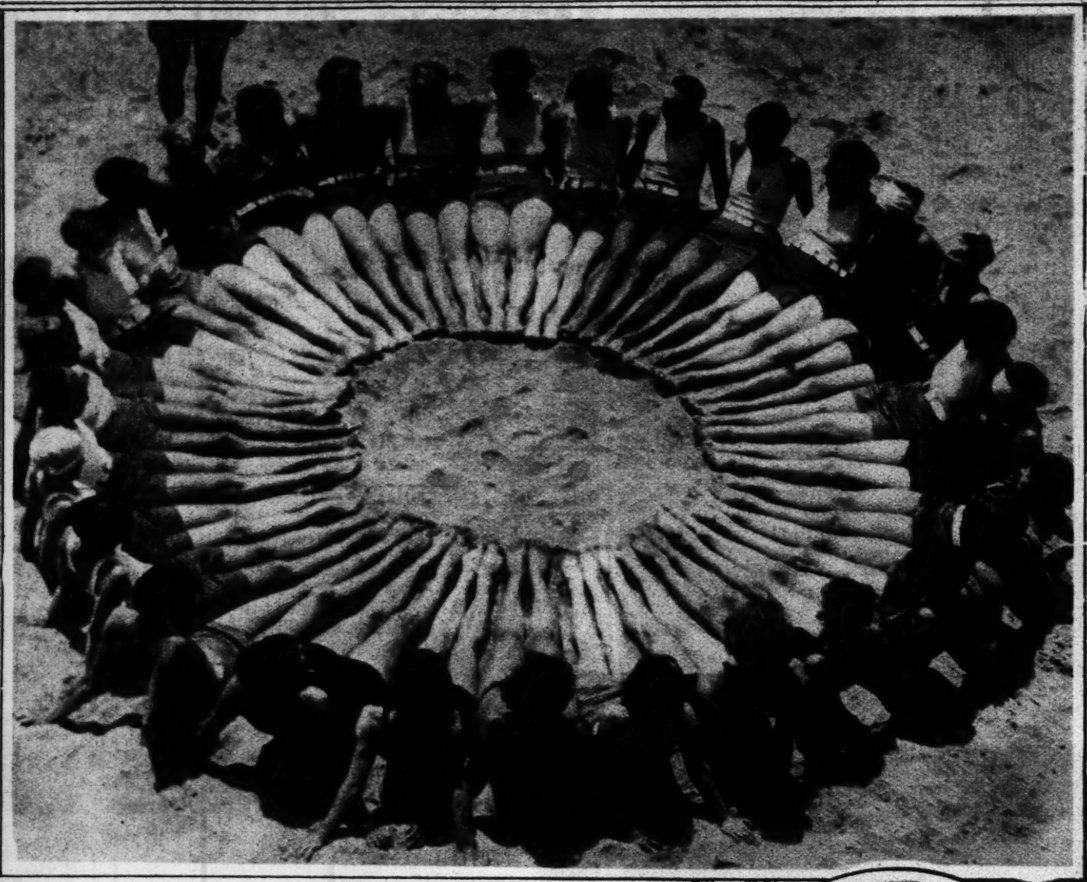

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate

THE GREEKS MADE HASTE TO LOCATE THE IMAGE, BRING IT TO THE SURFACE WITH ROPES, AND PLACE IT AGAIN ON ITS PEDESTAL. BY THAT TIME THE PLAGUE HAD CEASED, BUT THE SUPERSTITIOUS GREEKS WERE CONVINCED THAT THE STATUE OF THEAGENES HAD SAVED THEM. — •

What three great engineers are doing for the development of the coastal islands section of Georgia. The news section of today's Constitution contains George D. Lowe's most interesting story of this marvelous work of three nationally famous men who have come to Georgia and are taking advantage of the states unlimited possibilities.

Picture above indicates the manner in which Howard E. Coffin is reclaiming Sapeloe Island by a complete system of drainage. A great dynamite blast in a marsh field, all of which will be reclaimed.
Lower picture indicates a reclaimed Champeney Island field—long abandoned to the river but now marvelously productive under the magic touch of Col. T. L. Huston.

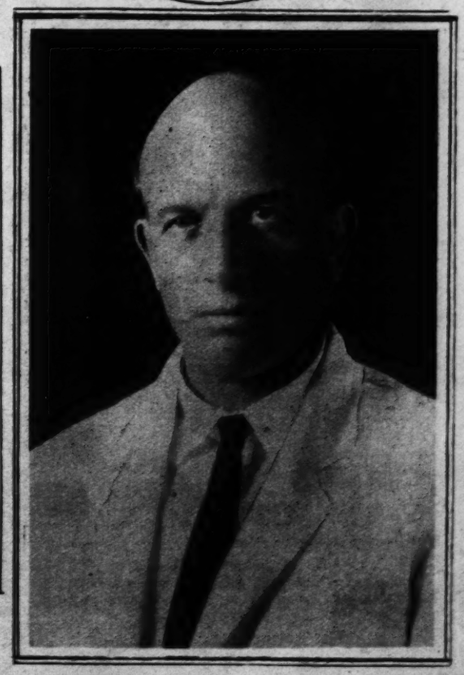

Three famous engineers who are reclaiming Tidewater Georgia and through whose instrumentality millions of dollars are being put to work in the development of Georgia's coastal section.

Upper left, Howard E. Coffin, automotive engineer and developer of Georgia's Seafood Resources and Island Resorts.

Upper right, Col. T. L. Huston, ex-baseball magnate, engineer and sportsman, with a genius for development which so impressed the recent Georgia general assembly as to obtain from it an appropriation along the line of his reclamation work.

Lower right, Col. R. E. Benedict, forestry engineer and developer, who is helping to make the Georgia Coastal Islands "blossom like a rose garden."

The "Four-Way" Laundry Tray

There it stands, right out in the middle of the basement! It has no need like other trays to lean against the wall. Every side is accessible.

It can be installed at the desired height. The inside is free from any projection, even a faucet, on which the clothes might catch and tear. The swinging-spout faucet fills both compartments. There is a separate connection for the hose that fills the washing machine.

One swinging-spout faucet, finished in non-tarnishing Chromard, fills both compartments with tempered water.

This modern tray is always glistening white, for it is made of Acid-Resisting Enamel. Cleansers and minerals in the water have no effect upon it.

Come in to see the "Four-Way" tray or write for free illustrated booklet. The trade-mark Standard A-R, identifying Acid-Resisting Enamel, is impressed in every "Four-Way" Laundry Tray.

Fat Is Not In Fashion

All styles call for slenderness, short skirts in particular. And most women, as you see are meeting that requirement.

The easy, pleasant way is Marmola Prescription Tablets. They act by correcting the cause. No abnormal exercise or diet is required.

People have used them for 19 years. They have told and shown the results to others, and the use has grown. Now, in these days of slender figures, people are using Marmola in a very extensive way.

You see the results everywhere. Perhaps your own friends can tell them. If so, they will say that Marmola brought none but good effects.

Try this time-tested method, so widely employed today. Simply take four tablets daily and watch results. Stop when you reach proper weight. A method used by millions, and for 19 years, must be both right and effective. Learn, for your own sake, what so many know about it.

Marmola prescription tablets are sold by all druggists at $1 per box. If your druggist is out, he will get them at once from his jobber.

GRAY HAIR—NO!

But don't try to fool others with dangerous "crude dyes." Call back the natural shade overnight this new safe way.

NO more dangerous "crude dyes." Instead natural shade is called back to hair by clear, colorless liquid 100% safe. Faded, graying streaks disappear. Hair becomes live looking and lustrous. Stays easy to curl. Does not wash off.

This way embodies elements that take place of color pigment and give natural effect. Auburn hair reverts to auburn—black to black. Used by 3,000,000 women.

Regular and Extra Sizes

FREE Delivery

Don't Send ONE PENNY

JUST send your name and address—no money—and I will send these dresses to you. This is an amazing opportunity to get two dresses at about half their regular price. One dress is made of a durable, long wearing gabardine cloth. Blouse is embroidered in Rayon (artificial silk.) Collar, cuffs and band at front of waistline are bound with braid. Front of skirt is tailored into deep pleats. This dress alone is worth more than the price we ask for both dresses. The other dress is made of a good quality fancy poiquette with Peter Pan collar and long sleeves. Folds at waistline give a two-piece effect. Deep kick pleat down center of front. Don't think these dresses are cheap because price is so low. COLORS: Gabardine dress comes in many shades. Poiquette dress in tan, blue or rose grounds. Regular and extra sizes, 32 to 52 bust.

JUST write us a letter, be sure to give size and color you want. When the two dresses arrive, pay the postman $1.98 for them. We've paid the delivery charges. If they are not much better than you expected, return them at once and we will cheerfully refund your money. Could anything be fairer? Order by No. 66.

GASOLINE ALLEY

IT'S TOO BAD THAT THE OLD TREES HAVE TO MAKE WAY FOR NEW BUILDINGS.

OO! LOOK AT IT GO, UNCA WALT.

MY, BUT THIS IS AN OLD TIMER! BY COUNTING THE RINGS YOU CAN TELL THEIR AGE, YOU KNOW. EACH RING MEANS A YEAR. LET'S SEE HOW OLD THIS ONE IS.

IT'S TOO MANY FOR ME TO COUNT.

118 RINGS! JUST THINK OF THAT! 118 YEARS OLD. WHY THIS TREE STARTED TO GROW ABOUT THE TIME THE CONSTITUTION, "OLD IRONSIDES," STARTED TO FIGHT.

IT PROBABLY SPROUTED WHEN THOMAS JEFFERSON WAS PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND ONLY TWO YEARS AFTER THE FIRST STEAMBOAT WAS BUILT.

IT WAS ABOUT THE SIZE OF A LEAD PENCIL WHEN THE WAR OF 1812 BROKE OUT AND A LITTLE LARGER WHEN NAPOLEON WAS DEFEATED BY WELLINGTON AT WATERLOO.

THIS RING WAS PUT ON ABOUT WHEN THE FIRST RAILROAD WAS OPENED ON THIS CONTINENT, 1830, AND 18 RINGS FARTHER ON GOLD WAS DISCOVERED IN CALIFORNIA.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN WAS INAUGURATED PRESIDENT WHEN THIS RING WAS FORMED AND FOUR YEARS LATER THE CIVIL WAR ENDED.

OH YES, AND THIS IS THE YEAR UNCA WALT WAS BORN. THIS TREE WAS THAT FAR ALONG WHEN I CAME INTO THE WORLD.

THIS IS THE RING OF THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR— 1898.

THE WORLD WAR STARTED IN 1914— JUST THINK OF ALL THE WARS FOUGHT SINCE THIS TREE PUSHED UP OUT OF THE GROUND, A TINY SPROUT.

AND IT HAS KEPT ON RECORDING HISTORY RIGHT UP TO THE PRESENT DAY— LOTS MORE OF IT IF WE COULD ONLY READ IT— WET YEARS AND DRY— WINDS AND STORMS AND FLOODS AND KILLING FROSTS—

UNCA WALT, IF YOU CUT A SNAKE IN TWO CAN YOU TELL HOW OLD HE IS IF YOU COUNT HIS RINGS?

DOWN ON TH' FARM— BY INK

YOU'RE A SWELL RUBE.

WHY?

I ASKED YOU WOULD YOU SELL ME A COW.

AND I SAID "YES"!

AND YOU SAID "GO BACK HERE A HALF MILE AND TURN TO THE LEFT—

HONK! HONK HONK HONK BY INK

NOW HURRY BACK FROM THE BUTCHER'S, MOLLY, I'M WAITING FOR THOSE PORK CHOPS.

GEE! TRAFFIC IS WORSE EVERY DAY, HOW CAN I GET ACROSS TO THE BUTCHER? ??

I CAN'T CROSS WITHOUT GETTING CRIPPLED OR KILLED — ??

?? AND MA WANTS THEM PORK CHOPS — ?? I KNOW WHAT I'LL DO —

HELLO, MR. BUTCHER, THIS IS MOLLY, GIMME A POUND OF PORK CHOPS AND THROW THEM ACROSS THE STREET.
